OUR EDUCATIONAL WORK.

The chief aim of the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Department of Agriculture during the past twelve years has been to disseminate information among consumers and manufacturers or venders of food stuffs. The prosecutions which have occurred from month to month have been mere incidents of the work of the Bureau. They have been necessary in order that a decent respect for law might be instilled into the minds of some makers and distributors of food products and also to the end that the health of consumers might be conserved. It has been the theory of the Dairy and Food Bureau that essential acts of Assembly must be enforced upon all who deliberately set about violating them for gainful purposes. The welfare of the people has been placed paramount. No man or corporation has been favored, none prosecuted until they have shown themselves impervious to reason or deaf to warning.

Agents of the Bureau have been instructed to act with prudence. No honest business has been disturbed. Prosecutions have not been made without ample warning. The unpremeditated sale of adulterated goods by well-meaning dealers has never been followed by prosecution unless plain warnings were unheeded. It has been the central thought of the Dairy and Food Commissioner that the families of the State were entitled to protection against unscrupulous and greedy manufacturers or dealers and that laws were entitled to the loyal support of every officer who had sworn to enforce them. The fact that prosecutions have been made from year to year in spite of warning and great moderation simply demonstrates that our food and dairy laws were necessary and that if they did not exist or were not enforced the consumer would soon be at the mercy of the unscrupulous. Under the existing administration education has been followed by prosecution of the obdurate or the careless.

The educational work has been conducted by the agents of the Bureau as well as by the successive issues of the Monthly Bulletin or of special bulletins prepared for the express purpose of enlightening the public concerning various phases of the food question. Prosecutions have always been merely incidental to the educational and investigating work of the Bureau. Among other publications we recall at this moment the Breakfast Food Bulletin, the Bulletin on Cheap Candies, the Bulletin dealing with molasses, syrups, etc., the Bulletins on the different brands and makes of catsups, flavoring extracts, egg substitutes and so-called egg-savers. In each instance careful investigation was made by a competent expert. Metropolitan journals gave the result of these investigations wide currency.

SOME FALLACIOUS SUBSTITUTES.

The keeper of a country store was asked by a customer for library paste. "We don't keep it," he said, "but we have some fine tooth powder. Won't that do just as well?" This anecdote is told by a contributor to The Forecast, who considers it typical of an attitude of mind. In the present food stringency, he asserts, many women are innocently making substitutions in the diet which substitute just as badly as tooth powder would apply for library paste. The maid who spilled half the milk soup and filled the tureen with water and the woman who advised another to diminish the proportion of meat in the beef-loaf and substitute boiled tapioca, are cited as cases in point. "A grating of cheese in the 'watered' milk soup, or a handful of chopped nuts in the beef-loaf would both have been excellent substitutions, and that these or their equivalents were not used was doubtless due to thoughtlessness or ignorance." He goes on:

"It therefore behooves every woman who is obliged to diminish any of the accustomed foods in the diet to see to it that she substitutes something which is really, and not seemingly, just as good.

"Advertisers of certain substitutes are apparently just as ignorant of what constitutes a genuine substitute as are the housewives who, misled by the advertisements, use them in good faith. To this class belong the 'Egg Substitutes' and so-called 'Egg Savers,' which a short time ago were so widely advertised. More than forty of these were collected for analysis by Commissioner James Foust, of the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture and were analyzed by Mr. Charles H. LaWall, the State chemist. The result of the analysis was that nearly all of the preparations were found to contain fifty per cent. or more of corn starch; most of them were artificially colored yellow by coal tar dyes, so as to make the cakes in which they were used look as if they were rich in eggs. Many of them contained soda and cream of tartar, or soda alone, for leavening purposes; a large number contained milk powder or casein in some form, and only about one-fourth of the number analyzed contained small proportions of dried-egg albumen.

"Of course the analysis at once showed that in no sense could these preparations be considered true substitutes for eggs. The thoughtful purchaser might, unaided, have made a similar inference, judging merely from the extravagant claims by the manufacturers. In one case a 'mustard spoonful'—whatever that may be—was said to be equal to two eggs; in no case was it said that more than a tea-spoonful was needed to replace one egg. The packages were sold at the rate of from six cents to nine cents an ounce, and a four-ounce package was advertised as being equal to three or four dozen eggs. The cartons were further dolled up with pictures of eggs, baskets of eggs, eggs with wings, hens and eggs and similar suggestive devices to snare the naive marketer—but only the naive marketer, for this was so very much like getting something for nothing that a business woman would be likely to look skeptically at the proposition. With eggs at sixty cents a dozen it could hardly be likely that the equivalent of three dozen could be sold for a quarter.

"In the State of Illinois, at the suggestion of Superintendent John B. Newman, of the Division of Foods and Dairies of the Department of Agriculture, a delightfully simple, practical, 'homey' kind of test was made of 'egg substitutes.' At his direction eleven batches of small cakes were made from a standard cup-cake batter—cakes which were all alike in their proportions of sugar, butter, flour and milk, but which differed as follows:

"The first batch was made with the orthodox number of eggs; the second was without either eggs or egg substitutes; the fifth to the ninth were made with different egg substitutes added according to the directions on the package; the tenth was made with a substitute which contained fifty-two per cent. of whole egg powder, and the eleventh had a little more than one-half ounce of whole egg powder added for each egg called for in the recipe.

"The materials were all accurately weighed and measured, the cakes—ten in each batch—were baked at the same temperature, and, after cooling, were cut, tasted and compared with the standard cake, No. 1, made with eggs. In scoring the cakes the 'taste' test was made by allowing portions of each cake 'to become thoroughly moistened with saliva, while being worked over by the tongue, and any flavors noted.'

"The cakes in which substitutes were used instead of eggs were in all points much inferior to the cake made with real eggs. In fact as good results could have been obtained in the baking if we had left out the so-called egg substitutes. Cake No. 2, baked without eggs or egg substitutes, in size shows up as well, or nearly as well, as those baked with substitutes.

"Fine grain and tenderness are essentials in all cakes made with butter. The use of pastry flour with its larger percentage of starch and its less viscous quality of gluten, helps to produce tenderness, so does the large amount of butter used in the cup-cake and others. This very tenderness interferes with the rising, since the delicate bubbles of gluten are apt to burst and cause the cake to fall. Hence, where pastry flour and butter are used, eggs are an essential, for their albumen is viscous enough to hold the air beaten in, yet is tenderer than the gluten when coagulated by heat."

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED IN JANUARY.

The number of prosecutions ordered by the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture in the month of January, 1919, was 32, which was twelve less than were ordered in December, 1918.

Violations of the Pure Food regulations were not numerous, thirteen Philadelphia and Montgomery county dealers having been prosecuted for the following named offenses: Sale of butter containing an excessive amount of moisture, 1; sale of tomato pulp unfit for food purposes, 4; sale of pigs feet, unfit for food purposes, 3; sale of pigs kidneys, unfit for food purposes, 1; sale of boiled ham, unfit for food, 1, and sale of boiled ham roll, unfit for food, 3.

In Allegheny and Chester counties sixteen dealers were prosecuted for various violations of the milk regulations. There was one prosecution for the sale of skimmed and watered milk; 3 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids and watered; 4 for the sale of watered milk, and 8 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids.

One Philadelphia dealer was prosecuted for violating the oleomargarine regulations in selling oleo colored with a coal tar dye and sold for butter.

Two Mifflin county dispensers of soft drinks were prosecuted for infringing on the non-Alcoholic Drink regulations, one for the sale of cider containing 5.08 per cent. alcohol, and one for the sale of sweet cider containing 2.93 per cent. alcohol.

WAR AND MILK.

From Hoard's Dairyman.

Under the above caption Dr. C. E. North, director of the North Public Health Bureau, New York City, discusses the milk problem in many of its different phases. In comparing the increased price of milk and other foods he shows that eggs have increased during the month of December, 1918, over the month of December, 1914, 269 per cent.; corn, 179 per cent.; sugar, 181 per cent.; beef, 166 per cent.; cheese, 228 per cent.; butter, 226 per cent.; and milk 88 per cent. "By this series," he says, "we again see that fluid milk has increased much less in total price, even considering that it once sold for 9 cents a quart. * * * These are the kind of facts that the critics of the milk industry ignore." * * *

The wise milk dealers would make such facts known to their consumers. From the actions of many milk dealers it would seem they had no interest in advising the consumer regarding the relative advance of prices of food products but have tried to lead the consumer to believe it was the producers' fault that milk was so high in price. When beef advances 166 per cent. in cost it is certainly not out of proportion for milk to advance 88 per cent. In fact the dairyman can well argue that milk, the most important food, would not be out of proportion in price if it advanced as much as beef.

PUTTING OLEO WHERE IT BELONGS.

From the Creamery Journal.

Some of the best suggestions that have been made for meeting the butter substitutes bugaboo were given in an address at the recent Oregon Creamerymen's Convention. In the first place it was proposed to educate the public to the true food value of milk products. Certainly the campaign begun along this line must be followed up if we are to meet the publicity propaganda of the oleo interests effectively. The appeal to the people through advertisements, published articles and demonstrations should receive the support of every dairyman.

But the other suggestions of this speaker were most pertinent--prohibition of the use of milk in the manufacture of oleomargarine and the printing on the package the exact constituents of the contents.

Is it possible that we have gone astray in our reasoning as to the matter of coloring oleo to look like butter? At least it would seem we have left a loophole. Pray, what is the difference between adding color to make the product look like butter and adding milk to make it taste like butter? Yet we have fought the use of the one and let the other process go unscathed. We have said: "Let oleo sell on its merits; its natural color is white and that's the way it should be sold." The only trouble with this is that we have not been inclusive enough. Why is it not equally as consistent to say "The natural taste of oleo is like suet, and suet it should remain."

And as to printing the exact contents on the package we are positive that the dairy people would be only too glad to have printed on their cartons the exact constituents of the contents, and if the oleo people are not ashamed of their goods they should be only too glad to comply with similar regulations.

All three of these suggestions are to the same end--that the people may know and realize what they are getting when they buy a pound of butter and what they are getting when they buy a pound of butter substitute. It would be folly for us to argue that oleo is entirely out of place in the scheme of existence, for presumably this is a free country and the packers or any other concern have the right to manufacture butter substitutes if they so desire. All the dairy industry asks is that in so manufacturing and offering for sale the product designed to fill the same place as butter, they do not infringe on the rights of butter or the claims to which it is entitled. But by endeavoring to color the product in imitation of butter and adding milk to give it the flavor of butter and advertising as to give the impression that a pound of oleo is equal in every way to a pound of butter, it certainly appears to be a case of "infringement of patent" and we have a right to rise in arms to defend our cause.

KIDDING THE HEN.

T. R. Johnson, of the poultry department at Purdue University, issues the following bulletin in regard to the modern system of stimulating egg production by lighting the hen houses with electricity:

"Chickens have no union organization and lengthening the working hours only serves to make them more industrious, and produce more eggs. This statement is borne out by the experiment in progress at Purdue University in which electric lights are used morning and evening.

"Two pens of thirty-five white leghorn hens are being fed the same ration. The chickens are as near alike as possible and have practically the same laying abilities. One lot keeps good hours rising and going to roost with the other chickens on the university farm. The other lot is being "kidded along" with an electric light which burns from 6 o'clock in the morning until all the light the day is going to bring is at hand. The lights are turned on again about 4 o'clock and allowed to run until about 9 o'clock in the evening. This causes the chickens to rise earlier and work later.

"The experiment started November 1 and in the first thirty days the birds in the lighted pen produced 503 eggs while the short day advocates laid only 352 eggs. Thanksgiving day the lighted pen yielded twenty-eight eggs and the unlighted only sixteen.

"A pen of twenty-five barred rocks responded to the electric lights within ten days. They were started November 18, laying only five eggs that day, on November 27 they produced twenty eggs and have been going at that pace since. * * *

"The lighting costs six and one-half cents a day per pen, or $1.95 for November. The increased egg production for that time, figuring the eggs worth only five cents a piece meant $7.55, a profit of $5.60 for the month alone."

WHY FACTORIES SHOULD HANDLE EGGS.

N. E. Chapman, state poultry specialist, St. Paul, Minn., gives the following reasons why cheese factories should handle eggs:

Because they have better facilities of storage to maintain quality, hasten shipments and save loss than any other marketing agency.

Because they can save their patrons time in marketing, and pay a higher cash price for graded eggs by check or due bill.

Because they have an opportunity to develop the poultry business in their locality as they have the dairy industry, and thus put the community on a cash basis.

Because they can co-operate in purchasing supplies as cartons, cases and fillers in large quantities at minimum cost and can co-operate in car load shipments with refrigeration service.

Because buyers of butter and cheese in state and nation also buy eggs and these dairy products may be shipped in the same car.

Because they can use the revenue derived from handling eggs for general maintenance, enabling them to pay better salaries, thus procuring more skillful workers.

Because they can aid in the conservation of one of the most popular dairy foods, saving the value of two eggs out of each dozen.

Because they can render an economic service to state and nation in reforming the marketing of eggs from producer to consumer.

TAKES STATE RECORD.

The farm hen with her 80 eggs a year can do like the ostrich and hide her head in the sand when some of the records of the single comb white leghorns at the Wisconsin Experiment Station are given.

The best hen ever reported at the station is a leghorn which has just finished her year's record of 263 eggs. She was one of an early hatch and began laying in the fall, instead of in the spring as do most farm hens. For eight consecutive months she laid 22 eggs or more, the highest number for any month being 26.

For perseverance, which is not common to all hens which make a high record the first year, the experiment station offers the record of another leghorn, who laid 432 eggs in two years. During the first year she laid 248 eggs; during the second year, in spite of molting, she laid 184 eggs. Disproving the theory that high producing hens will not produce fertile eggs, 44 healthy chicks were hatched from this hen.

The above records are especially good when the severe Wisconsin winter is considered. No special conditions were given these record birds, the housing and feed being those possible under farm conditions. Green feed, plenty of water, grit and beef scrap, make the line between 80 eggs a year and 263 eggs a year.

A MATTER OF EDUCATION.

A prominent woman in a certain town served nut oleomargarine to her family and at a dinner to which she invited some friends she also served the same product. She informed them of this and further said she could not afford to buy butter at its present price. One man among her guests knew the value of butter and proceeded to tell her the difference between vegetable fats and milk fats as has been discovered by Mr. McCollum and others. He informed her that milk fat, from which butter is made, contained substances essential to growth and that they were not found in other fats commonly used in making oleomargarine. This statement challenged the attention of the woman, for she was deeply concerned about the proper diet of her two young children.

Literature containing information regarding the food value of milk and its products was placed in her hands. She read about the experiments conducted with animals to determine the relative differences in the nourishing qualities of fats. She found that animals fed milk fat made normal growth, came to maturity at the proper age, were healthy and strong. Those not fed milk fat, but vegetable and animal fats, from which oleomargarine is made, did not grow normally or mature properly, but if fed long enough upon a ration containing no milk fat, but other fats, they would die. She discovered, too, that certain diseases follow among children in particular when they are not fed a sufficient amount of milk fat.

She has thanked the person who placed this information in her hands and is deeply grateful to him. She feeds her children butter now. There are thousands of just such mothers in our country and it is the duty of the dairy industry to place in their hands literature which advises them about the growth producing substances in milk and milk fat. No true mother will knowingly starve her children but this is what many are doing in not feeding their children an adequate quantity of milk and butter.

MILK PRICES IN BRITAIN.

Milk prices in Britain this winter are based on cost of production as determined by the British "Food Production Department." The results of this investigation, reports an English livestock journal, were taken by the "Committee on the Production and Distribution of Milk" as the most reliable estimate obtainable of the average cost of production in England and Wales, and the percentage increase on each item of cost was estimated for the winter of 1918-1919. This resulted in an estimated average cost of 40.5 per gallon. The addition of 1c to represent the cost of transport from the farm to the railway station or producer's premises, brought the net cost to the producer in England and Wales to 41.5c per gallon.

The estimated average cost of production in Scotland was 46.4c. With these figures before them the committee agreed to take 44c. per gallon as the basal figure for use in arriving at the producer's price.

It is important to note that the figures as to cost of production which the committee had before them to arrive at the above conclusion, had been subjected to careful scrutiny by independent experts, and in many instances were recalculated according to a uniform method in order to arrive at a net cost.

CLEANLINESS ABOUT THE DAIRY

It pays to be clean around the dairy. A great deal of poor milk, cream and butter are produced in this country because of unclean utensils. Careful methods in drawing the milk and in handling it otherwise are set at naught if the milk is held in an unclean pail or can and allowed to remain there. It is not necessary that the dirt be present in sufficient quantity to be seen by the naked eye in order to render the utensil unfit for use. A dirty separator is a common source of contamination. The separator should be taken apart and carefully washed and scalded after each time it is used. After the separator parts have been cleaned and dried, the surface should have a clean dry appearance, and should not be greasy to the touch. A greasy coating on the interior of the milk can will spoil the milk or cream in a comparatively short time. It doesn't cost much more to keep everything clean and the results obtained are more satisfactory in every way.

MAKING COTTAGE CHEESE ON THE FARM.

From Hoard's Dairyman.

Cottage cheese is one of the varieties of cheese that can be profitably manufactured on a small scale by the dairy farmer. Little additional equipment will be needed other than what can be made on the farm. It is necessary to have fresh, clean milk in order to make cottage cheese of a high quality. Milk that has become slightly sour may be used, provided that no bad odors or flavors be present, but the quality of the cheese may be inferior. Either separator or cooler skim milk may be used. Unless the skim milk is to be made into cheese as soon as separated, it should be cooled to 50 degrees F. or lower and held at that temperature until ready for use. A good grade of cottage cheese cannot be made from the skim milk from milk to which water has been added to hasten separation.

Setting the Milk.

Place the skim milk in a clean pail or "shotgun" can and set in a pan of either hot or cold water, as needed to bring the temperature to 75 degrees F.

If the milk is sweet and no sour milk or buttermilk is obtainable let the milk stand at 75 degrees F. for five or six hours before adding the junket tablet. The milk must be kept at 75 degrees until firmly curdled (coagulated). This can best be done by placing the can of milk in a wooden tub or a half barrel and surrounding the can with water at 75 degrees F. A double boiler may be used. Do not disturb the milk until ready to drain. Milk set in the afternoon should be ready to make up the next morning. * * *

The curd is ready to drain when the milk has become firmly curdled so that a very little whey appears on top. The object of draining is to remove the whey. Pour the curd into a cotton or cheesecloth bag, breaking the curd as little as possible. This pouring can best be done by the use of a draining rack. Place the cloth over the rack, fastening it at the corners by hooks. Slide the curd out of the can as gently as possible to avoid breaking the curd. After the draining has proceeded for about fifteen minutes, raise and lower the draining cloth at the corners and sides, first one corner, then the other, in order to loosen the curd from it and hasten the draining. The draining may be completed by tying the corners of the cloth together and hanging up or pressing. By the former method it will require from 12 to 24 hours to drain sufficiently. The curd at the outside dries out faster than the center and may form lumps. This can be prevented by kneading the curd slightly two or three times during the draining process.

The draining process can be finished in 30 or 45 minutes by pressing. * * *

Salt is added to the cheese to improve its flavor, the amount depending upon the individual taste. * * * The flavor of cottage cheese may be improved by adding a little sweet or sour cream. * * *

POULTRY IN WORLD'S FOOD PROGRAM.

From the Creamery Journal.

The importance of poultry in the world's food program should make poultry raising unusually attractive during the coming year. While poultry is not as well adapted for export as pork or beef, it can nevertheless be shipped in frozen condition. Chickens are used to a considerable extent in military hospitals and the American navy is also a large purchaser of poultry. The principal demand, however, will be for domestic consumption to replace, in a measure, the meats needed for export. Outstanding merits of the poultry industry are the rapidity with which flocks may be enlarged or diminished in response to demand and their adaptability for home consumption at any time of the year.

During the period of reconstruction, these features make poultry a branch of agriculture having minimum market risks. The period between production and marketing is also relatively short; much of the labor can be performed by women if necessary, and under average farm conditions the feed required for poultry is largely a by-product not really marketable. The American hen practices conservation by instinct.

Compared with other animals, the domestic fowl is a small unit, but wide distribution and large numbers make it a very important factor in supplying the nation's food requirements.

In anticipation of continued need for large quantities of both poultry and eggs * * * the desirability of keeping laying hens and choice pullets is pointed out. * * *

In brief, the poultry industry appears to be one of our national food resources which may wisely be developed both in amount and quality. The meat and eggs of our domestic fowls will help to maintain nutrition at home while the United States is supplying vast quantities of meats required to stop famine and anarchy abroad.

PROPER COOLING OF POULTRY PREVENTS SPOILAGE.

To prevent a repetition this year of heavy spoilages of dressed poultry that have occurred in other years because shippers did not precool properly before shipping, specialists of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, urge greater care than ever before. They warn that with the strain of traffic on the railroads, heavy losses of foodstuffs are likely unless measures are taken against these mistakes. Shippers should view the additional care necessary to prevent waste and decay as an insurance as well as a duty.

The Bureau makes the following suggestions for the handling and transportation of dressed poultry:

1. Be sure the chicken's crop is empty before killing. "Croppy" birds "green" easily.

2. Begin the cooling just as soon as the feathers are off, whether it is done in iced water or cold air. Don't let the birds pile up in the picking room waiting for a convenient moment to transfer to the chill room or the ice tank.

3. If you ice pack quick cooling is very essential. The old idea that animal heat must come out slowly is all wrong. Quick cooling—the quicker the better—gives the best results. In the first cooling tanks the birds should be left for twelve hours. Have the water inlet at the bottom of the tank and let the water flow constantly. If the water comes in from the top only, the birds in the upper part of the tank are cooled quickly, whereas those at the bottom are cooled so slowly that they are likely to become green-struck. After taking the birds out of the first tank place them backs up in a layer over the bottom of the ice tank. Cover them completely with crushed ice and continue this procedure until the tank is filled. Pack out just before shipping. * * *

4. If you dry cool, and that is what you should be doing, because dry cooled poultry keeps better than water cooled, have your chill room between 28 and 35 degrees. It will take about 24 hours to bring the birds down to the temperature of the room. Poultry flesh will not freeze until below 28 degrees F.

5. Don't hold poultry for shipment one day longer than you must unless you have a quick freezer available. Undue holding is especially hard on wet cooled poultry. This should never be held more than two or three days before shipping. Dry cooled poultry can be held a week if the chill room temperature never goes much above 32 degrees, F.

6. As soon as the poultry is chilled pack it in boxes, kegs or barrels. Don't let it wait for days until you have the whole shipment. By doing so you will have an unnecessary loss by shrinkage. The loss is almost nothing when the birds are tightly packed in good packages.

7. Don't put fresh killed poultry into the chill room with birds that are chilled until the latter are packed. It is better to have two chill rooms to be used alternately, or to keep one for a packing room. * * *

8. Long holding is apt to result in a growth of mold unless the room is kept below 35 and unless it is very clean. It is a good plan to disinfect the chill room at the beginning of the season. * * *

PACKERS AND THE DAIRY INDUSTRY.

From Hoard's Dairyman.

There is some danger of the dairy industry falling into the same plight as the meat industry. Several of the large packers are already handling large quantities of butter and cheese and each year finds them doing a larger volume of business. If the dairy farmers of this country are alert to their own welfare they will not permit a few large concerns to dominate their business. The report of the Federal Trade Commission regarding the dealings of packers states: "The five great packing concerns have gained such a dominating position that they control at will the market in which they buy their supplies and the market in which they sell their products and hold the fortunes of their competitors in their hands." This is not a healthy condition. It breeds discontent, even though the packers pay a fair market price to the farmer for his products and sell to the consumer at a small margin of profit. We must sustain a certain amount of competition, of independence in marketing, if farm products are to be sold at fair prices and if the consumer is to buy them at a reasonable price, and all concerned satisfied.

We hope that through organization, which is going on so rapidly among the milk producers of this country, they will see the trend of affairs and will not permit the dairy industry to fall into the hands of a few firms. Enterprises like those in Vermont, where butter, cheese, cream and ice cream may be manufactured or whole milk may be sold for direct consumption, should be established everywhere in this broad land. If we do not organize the dairy industry and provide ways for handling milk and its products, we are likely to find ourselves in the same position as those who produce meat.

EUROPEAN LIVE STOCK LOSSES.

Commenting on the comparative losses in live stock of the warring and neutral nations in Europe the Milk Reporter says:—

As regards meat the Central Powers were much better prepared for the war than the Allies. Although the Allies possessed a greater number of meat animals the Central Powers had 42 per cent. more per capita. This advantage amounted to 33 animals of all classes per 100 population.

Due apparently to acquisition of animals by conquest Germany has not slaughtered her home supply as rapidly as otherwise would have been necessary. There is now practical exhaustion of animals in Belgium, Servia and Roumania as a result of invasion according to information from very reliable sources. In total animals the Allies have decreased their herds and flocks nearly 46,000,000 head, while Germany has reduced hers by 18,000,000 head—only slightly more than a third as many. The figures include cattle and sheep and hogs. Neutral nations show a total net reduction amounting to 1,412,000 head. The European loss thus exceeds 65,000,000 head, without taking into consideration Austria, Turkey and Russia, which would undoubtedly bring the total to over 100,000,000.

A somewhat clearer view of the milk situation at present is secured by reducing the number of animals to the actual amount of dressed meat they will yield. Rating cattle as equivalent to 500 pounds of dressed meat apiece, sheep at 40 pounds and hogs at 150 pounds, it appears that the various countries have suffered losses in their total meat assets to the following extent:

Name.	Per Cent. Losses on Meat Basis.
England,	12.5
Allies as a group,	28.7
Belgium,	82.0
France,	21.4
Italy,	17.8
Germany,	36.3
European neutrals,	0.9

Considering the poor condition of the animals still alive and the reported reduction in live weight, the possible meat resources of Europe are still further reduced.

The total number of cattle, sheep and hogs now in the United States is about 187,000,000, according to best estimates, which makes a striking comparison with the European depletion of 100,000,000 animals. Briefly, it appears that Europe has lost considerably over half as many meat animals as there are in the United States.

SHOULD RAISE COWS.

During the war there has been an increase in the population of the United States. This country has issued from the test comparatively untouched and unhampered. By reason of its shorter participation in the war and its freedom from such devastation as has swept Europe its relative position industrially, financially, socially and governmentally is stronger than it was five years ago. The world does not yet realize how stricken are the European countries and how long it will take them to recover and make their former material contributions to the world's stock.

Clearly, there need be no alarm as to the future ability of this country to hold its due place in the trade of the world, and especially as to the ability of agriculture to maintain its position.

The markets of the world are open for American products. It is almost assured that a considerable demand from European countries for foodstuffs will continue for one year or more. For these reasons, therefore, it would seem that American farms should maintain as high production as local economic conditions and the applications of the principles of sound agricultural practice permit.

In response to the plea for food many farmers have plowed up permanent pastures and other grass lands that are needed for live stock and planted them to grain crops. Other farmers have broken their regular rotation of crops and, in many cases, have grain on the same land year after year.

Now that farming is to be restored to a peace-time basis, it would seem that many of the lands suitable and needed for pasture and meadow should be reseeded to grass. Regular and satisfactory rotation of crops should be established, so that fertility may be restored and the productive power of the soil increased and maintained. Livestock should find a place on a larger number of farms since it will aid in the use of large amounts of roughage. * * * U. S. Department of Agriculture.

NO SUBSTITUTES FOR BUTTER.

"For butter or for worse." Whether or not to substitute oleos, margarines or near butters for true cow's milk butter was the purpose of an elaborate and intensive research by Professors W. G. Halliburton and J. C. Drummond of King's College, London. Knowledge of nutrition grows apace these days. What was once considered nourishment and good food, such as broths, beef tea and other concoctions, are known now to be mere stimulants with little food value.

Valuable practical applications of laboratory researches are now the guides of the dinner table, at least of forward looking and acting people. The determination of the food qualities of dairy butter in contrast to its various substitutes was the end of the King's College investigation.

A growth promoting substance, as well as vitamins, is present in fresh cow's milk and butter. It is also present in butter fat, butter oil, egg yolk, cod liver oil, beef and other meat fats.

This very necessary member of vital chemicals is, however, absent from most vegetable oils. * * * When made into butter these oils were unable to fill the needs of the animal economies. Lard, like these vegetable oils, is deficient in the growth promoting substance. It is the only animal fat which lacks this important chemical.

Substitute butters are animal fat margarines, vegetable oil margarines and nut oleomargarine. The first are almost as expensive as butter. Oleomargarines use various animal fats as their base.

JEFFERSON MEDICAL COLLEGE

DEPARTMENT OF

HYGIENE AND BACTERIOLOGY

DR. RANDLE C. ROSENBERGER.

July 23, 1918.

Mr. J. Foust,
Harrisburg, Pa.

My Dear Sir:

Five samples of eggs were received July 18, 1918, in sterile bottles, labelled 13017, 13018, 13019, 13020 and 13021.

No. 13017 possessed a heavy stale odor while the remaining specimens gave a heavy sweet offensive odor.

All specimens were plated upon plain agar and upon special media, and inoculations made into fermentation tubes, using litmus-glucose bouillon. The results follow:

13017..	Colonies per cc	1,680,000	of which 50,000 were gas producers
13018..	" " "	2,800,000
13019..	" " "	12,800,000
13020..	" " "	11,360,000
13021..	" " "	8,730,000

Specimens in the fermentation tubes, all gave acid and gas production with the exception of 13021.

While these specimens fail to show many acid and gas producing colonies of bacteria upon plating media, yet the number of colonies in general is excessive for fresh frozen eggs, therefore, I cannot recommend these eggs as fit for food purposes.

Very truly yours,

DR. RANDLE C. ROSENBERGER,
Professor of Hygiene and Bacteriology.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture estimates one pound of butter equals twenty-one pounds of milk, one pound of cheese equals ten pounds of milk and one pound of condensed milk equals two and a half pounds of milk.

According to official figures 62 markets in 1918 received 25,204,617 cattle, an increase of 2,148,236 over 1917; 44,870,070 hogs, an increase of 6,404,717; 21,787,656 sheep and lambs, an increase of 1,931,048. The total number of animals received at these markets was therefore 91,862,343. A livestock industry which can market such an increase in numbers and yet maintain its foundation for future production has no parallel in the history of any nation.

America and the allies have pooled food resources and it is now up to the allies to put more in the pool and take less out.

The Blue Valley Bulletin advises all farmers to hold to the cow, sow and hen.

The cow is an income producer. She brings in her harvest continually. At times it may be hard to scrape up enough to feed, but it usually can be done. The cow returns most of her feed to the land in the shape of manure and this means that she keeps up the fertility of the land. The pasture continually becomes more fertile, and growing such crops as alfalfa and corn puts the land in better condition for growing crops. Even if the cow does not make much profit she makes the acres more productive.

Secretary of Agriculture Houston says:—"Farmers are not spectacular performers. They do not furnish sensations and headlines. They work in season and out of season, from early dawn until dusk, but they do not work in the limelight."

It is impossible to over-produce any line of essential food.—United States Food Administration.

It is claimed that $50,000,000 loss is the annual toll of breakage and deterioration of eggs. This loss will closely approximate 50 per cent. of the value of the industry. As a moral economy every person engaged in marketing eggs should strive to minimize this waste.

OLEO FROM PETROLEUM.

From The Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.—February 17, 1919.

Professor George Knox, M. I. M. E., F. G. S., principal of the South Wales and Monmouthshire School of Mines, whose services as a mining expert have been requisitioned by the government in connection with the war, informed the Wigan Mining College a few days ago that England had been making margarine from coal as one of its by-products. While it might help the bread to go over, he said, it did not fatten the eater at all.

POWDERED MILK GAINS.

From The International Confectioner, February, 1919.

The powdered milk business has had a remarkable growth during the last few years. In 1917 there were 11 plants making powdered whole-milk, six of them were in New York, one in Pennsylvania, one in Maryland, two in Michigan and one in Arkansas. They produced 3,138,809 pounds during that year.

There were 38 plants making skim-milk powder. They are located as follows:

New York, 15; Pennsylvania, 3; Illinois, 2; Michigan, 4; Ohio, 2; Wisconsin, 5; Kansas, 1; Minnesota, 3; Kentucky, 1; California, 2.

COMING DOWN OUT OF THE CLOUDS.

For the past two years everybody and everything has been abnormal. The great war in which our nation was engaged as an associate of the free countries of Europe in the effort to destroy the vain ambitions of a would-be world conqueror disarranged individual and official life. Laws were made subservient to national and international necessities and the great cause was permitted to dominate business and official as well as individual life. It was inevitable that such should be the case, but now that the war has ended, as all wars should end, in the triumph of righteous principles of government, it is well to get back to conditions as they existed before the late Austro-Hungarian empire fired the first gun against Serbia.

While the war lasted it was necessary for the state food executives to adjust the administration of their offices to meet the requirements of the National Food Administration. Everybody knows that the allied nations, as well as the unfortunate inhabitants of the devastated regions, depended largely if not entirely upon the United States for the maintenance of their armies in a fit condition and the salvation of their women and children from the grim grip of famine. Under the circumstances no special effort was made to enforce the food laws; it was realized that in the midst of war laws must necessarily be silent. Thus some things were allowed that under normal conditions would have invited prosecution and punishment.

Getting down as we are to conditions as they existed before the war, it is quite evident that it is the duty of food control officials to remember that they are pledged to enforce the several laws existing in their respective states having reference to the manufacture and sale of articles of food. The only worth-while vision at the present moment is the vision which enforces the duty of obedience to law. Nothing is more dangerous in any department of life than constant dreaming, and this is especially true in the matter of food control. Perhaps it is all well enough for poets or writers of romance to dream dreams and see visions, but the men who are in charge of food control should be guided by plain practical common sense ideas and wholly devoted to the business of protecting the health of the people from the assaults of food pirates.

To be perfectly plain about it, no food control official has any right to read his visions into the letter of the law. It is his duty to enforce all acts of the legislature dealing with food or non-alcoholic drinks, or relating to the same. In the discharge of his executive duties it is not required that he go farther. He is an executive, not a lawmaker. His sphere of duty does not extend into the region of visionary expedients. He violates law if he permits a dollar of the public money to be expended in the execution of projects which are beyond the law. In short, if he undertakes to carry his visions into the realm of action he has gone out of his sphere and entered a region in which he soon becomes lost and the chances are that he will neglect his actual and legitimate duties and squander the money of the state whose agent he is for things outside the law.

EUROPEAN HUNGER AND PREJUDICE.

Dr. David Fairchild, of the United States Department of Agriculture, in an article in the Journal of the Franklin Institute (Philadelphia) on "The Palate of Civilized Man," thinks that the mental attitude enters strongly into the problem of feeding the world. The writer states that as a general thing people will starve rather than eat what they do not like, even when the food in question has been the staple of whole nations for centuries. The following extracts are taken from the article:

"Could a Southern planter or a Western farmer have imagined that the Belgians would have refused to eat his corn or that the British would even under the pressure of war prices buy cornmeal with great reluctance and the reason be that 'corn-meal is chicken food'? The soldiers' likes and dislikes in food have no doubt restricted and hampered the prosecution of the war. Blackberry jam formed an integral part of the ration of our miniature standing army, but it is hardly to be expected that it will be available to the millions of men soon to be in the field. Now while the facts and events are fresh in every one's mind it may be well to consider whether it may not be easier to change our minds than to change our agriculture.

"Consider the corn situation today and its bearing upon the gigantic problem before us of feeding starving Europe. When I first heard that the Belgians refused to eat corn and that the Irish and English would eat anything else before they would touch it, my first impulse was to insist that they ought to be made to eat it. Edward Eyre Hunt, the author of 'War-Bread,' explained and made it entirely clear to me that a shocked and outraged people, wrought up and nervous to a high degree as a result of the treatment they have received is in no mental attitude to learn to like new food. The task of education would have been too long and more expensive than the shifting of our own menu at home, and in the meantime would have cost many thousands of lives. Resort was made to the use of different names for corn and concealment of it in war-bread with three parts of rye flour. * * *

"Not to like a food which has been the staples of peoples for thousands of years, and today is produced by the thousand million bushels and feeds hundreds of millions of people seems to us who like it a strange, incomprehensible spectacle. Yet it is no stranger than that of the American people and their indifference to that other great cereal, rice, which is produced in larger amounts than any other cereal in the world and forms the staff of life of hundreds of millions of civilized peoples.

"It is said the European is dependent upon the wheat loaf and the bakeries of that country are ill-suited to utilize corn. We are sometimes inclined to insist that they should break away from the exclusive use of the wheat loaf and learn to make corn bread—yet we have not learned to cook rice properly and complain of its insipid character, which must be an attitude hard for our oriental neighbors to understand. This indifference toward rice, of which staple we even now consume only the insignificant quantity of seven pounds per capita, has led to the abandonment of the fertile rice fields of the Carolinas, and today efforts are being made to find some paying crop to take its place there, because our meagre demands have been met until very recently by the California and Texas rice areas recently developed."

AMERICAN CANNERIES DEFEATING WORLD HUNGER.

Edward Mott Wooley, writing in McClure's for March, says that the close of the war brings two hundred million additional mouths and appetites to our table and he points out that it is a big relief to learn that the possibilities of the canning industry "have scarcely been touched."

Shortly after the United States entered the war the government practically drafted, coordinated, inspected and regulated our 3,500 canneries. In 1914 the canneries of the country were preserving 3,000,000,000 cans of food a year. This product has been more than doubled.

The following extracts are taken from the article:

"The United States soldiers have consumed 1,500,000 cans of food daily, or about 548 000,000 a year. Figured at an average retail price of 25 cents a package the value would be close to $137,000,000. The biggest item is condensed or evaporated milk. Then, in the order of their quantities, come jams, tomatoes, corn, baked beans, peas, salmon, peaches, pineapples, catsup, stringless beans, apricots, pumpkins, lobsters, and clam juice.

"It may be interesting for a moment to go beyond canned foods and get an idea of the total quantity of foodstuffs required daily for our army at its maximum: 13,500,000 pounds or the equivalent of 225 carloads. In a year this would make a train of 82,125 cars. The total annual cost of food alone during the war has been more than half a billion dollars and if we include the expense of transportation, preparing and serving the total is probably over a billion a year.

"The quantity of food sent from the United States to the allied countries has been almost incredible. Of all kinds, including canned products, we furnished between July of 1914 and the summer of 1918 complete rations for 60,000 000 people for a year, and in addition, supplied proteins for 23,000,000 others. Of all this 99 per cent. went to England and France. But, of course, canned foods played only a modest part in this vast total."

The salmon holds first place in that important department of cannable foods—fish. Last year the retail value of the salmon pack of the United States was nearly $80,000,000.

"The mystery of the salmon is one of the strangest in nature. The great bulk of the Pacific coast varieties go into the deep sea from the fresh-water beds, where they hatch, and remain in the ocean from four to six years. Then, like migratory birds, they come back to their identical breeding places—male and female alike. They are large fish, sometimes weighing eighty pounds, and they make their way up the rivers and creeks by the million, forcing themselves into shallow pools where the spawning takes place. A salmon spawns but once—and then dies; and the male, too dies on the first trip back to his birthplace, the males and females being about equally divided. Both parents are fated to perish in the full tide of their strength in order to furnish food for their young. Their bodies sink to the bottom and are preserved from putrefaction by some provision of nature. * * *

"One of the most important of all canned products for the soldier is baked beans, of which the government took about 360,000,000 cans in 1918. Gage this quantity from the fact that it would give 2,000,000 people a can every day for a year.

"One Illinois canner packed nothing but beans for government use for a period of six months last year, running day and night. He produced over 275 car loads.

"Baked beans, of course, form the smaller part of American bean production. Dried beans are shipped to Europe in immense quantities. On the piers of New York last summer one concern employed 150 men rebagging beans for the Belgian Relief. For world relief both dried and canned beans promise to be huge factors.

"The need of the world for food is almost certain to develop in the United States many lines of canned products hitherto scarcely known; for example, canned eggs. Experiments have been made, too, in canning ostrich eggs. One of these is the equivalent of twenty-four hen's eggs. I believe, however, that this product is only put up in liquid form for cooking purposes. * * *

"One of the most vital of canned products to come under government demand was milk, and the requirements grew so fast that plants ran nights and Sundays. In 1918 the government took a billion and a half pounds of canned milk. The Army and Navy divided the product equally. Thirty-two thousand freight cars were needed to transport this supply for the government, and its value was $165,000,000. Illinois led in production. * * *

COMPETENT, COURTEOUS AND USEFUL.

In another part of the present issue of the Bulletin will be found the very interesting and practical address delivered by Dr. J. S. Abbott, Chemist in Charge, Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., before the third annual convention of the Central Atlantic States Dairy and Food Officials Association, recently held in the city of Philadelphia. Dr. Abbott's address deals with "Organization and Administration of Food and Drug Control Agencies," and is a valuable contribution to the literature of this important branch of the public service. It deserves a wide circulation.

In this connection it is a very great pleasure to pay a tribute of appreciation and gratitude to Dr. Abbott, Chemist in Charge, Bureau of Chemistry of the National Department of Agriculture, who has used his utmost endeavors to be of practical use to the entire country. His previous work as head of the Dairy and Food Department of the imperial state of Texas, prepared the way for his very practical and helpful service at the head of the Federal Bureau of Chemistry, at the seat of the national government. The Department of Agriculture is to be congratulated upon the acquisition of such a competent official.

From the time he entered upon his present duties Dr. Abbott has been unwearied in his efforts to render practical and useful services to the people at large and to the several states. The Dairy and Food Bureau of Pennsylvania's Department of Agriculture has been placed under heavy obligations by his constant and courteous efforts to be of service to its constituents. It is a fine thing to have so competent and obliging an official at the seat of the national government.

MILK—THE BEST FOOD WE HAVE

A quart a day for every child, if possible, a pint without fail; a third of a quart for each adult. Plenty of milk will help give all your children, big and little, the chance for health they ought to have. Buy more milk and your family will be better fed.

Milk Helps Your Children to Grow. Besides being a good all-round food milk has something special in it that makes children grow. This something is found in some other foods, but not in such large amounts as in milk. Give your boys and girls milk for their chance to grow.

Milk Helps Your Children to Keep Well. It will help keep you well too. Look at children who do not get milk, but get tea and coffee instead. Aren't most of them pale and sickly? There are always very many sick children in cities and in countries where milk is scarce. When milk prices go up and mothers begin to economize on milk more children become sick. Do not let your children run this risk. Give them pure, clean milk, and help them to grow up strong and well and win in their fight against disease. Save on other things if you must, but not on milk, your child's best food.

Milk Gives Your Children Lime and other salts which they need. There must be plenty of lime in their food, for a great deal of it is needed for their bones and teeth and a little for their blood and all other parts of their bodies. Right food, not drugs, is what children need. Big boys and girls and grown people, as well as children, need lime, because the bones are constantly wearing away little by little and must be replaced.

Milk is the chief food for lime. It is much richer in it than other common foods. These lines stand for lime, the top one for the lime in a cup of milk, the others for the lime in a serving of some other foods. Notice how much more there is in milk than in the others.

AMOUNT OF LIME IN

1 cup of milk.

$\frac{1}{2}$ cup carrots.

1 egg.

2 slices of bread.

Milk is the cheapest food for lime. Buy milk. You and your children need its lime.

Milk Gives Your Children the Body-Building Protein, one of the materials from which their bodies are made. Milk is like eggs and meat in this. This body-building substance, the protein, of milk is not new to you, for curd is milk protein. Cottage cheese is curd separated out from milk. When we drink milk or eat cheese we give our bodies proteins which are changed and become part of our muscles, blood, and other parts of the body. The milk protein is good for everybody and especially good for children. They need a great deal of it because their bodies grow so fast.

Milk Gives Your Children Fuel to burn in their bodies. They need the fuel to keep them warm and to help them run and play and work, much as an automobile needs gasoline or a steam engine needs coal. They are so active that they need more fuel for their size than grown people do. The fat and the milk sugar and part of the protein in the milk all burn up as fuel.

Milk is much cheaper fuel than meat. A quart gives the same amount of fuel as a whole pound of lean meat or as eight eggs. Think of the cost! Isn't the milk far the cheapest? Still less expensive fuel is a bowl of bread and milk or corn meal mush and milk.

Skim Milk is Good Food. It has the lime and protein and sugar of the whole milk. Use it, but use whole milk, too. Skim milk lacks fat and has not so much of the growth substances as has whole milk.

Milk Should Not Be the Only Food For Children, of course. They need vegetable, fruits, and cereals. But even the bigger boys and girls should have milk. Milk is good for grown people, too. They still need the lime and protein and its other substances. Don't think of it only as a refreshing drink, but as a good nourishing food.

Be Sure Your Milk is Clean and Fresh. If you live in the city, buy it pasteurized from a clean dairy. In the country see that your cows and milkers are clean and healthy. Keep your milk clean, cold, and covered.

WAYS OF USING MORE MILK.

Cereals Cooked in Milk. Corn meal, oatmeal, and rice are delicious cooked in skim milk. Use the same amount of milk as you would water for oatmeal and corn meal. For rice, you can well use a good deal more milk—four or even more cups of milk to one of rice. Cook for an hour in a double boiler. This makes a delicious creamy cereal. For milk cereal puddings add sugar or sirup and raisins.

SUGAR AND PROHIBITION.

Dr. Frederic W. Murphy, chief chemist in charge of Service Bureau contributes an article on this subject to the American Sugar Bulletin, from which the following is taken:

The complexities of the wants of man are in proportion to his activities. His life is one continual prolonged struggle to satisfy his cravings. These cravings manifest themselves in various ways according to environment. In one, it may be gratification of sensory desires; in another, mental gratification; but whatever wants are evidenced, they can be classed under three headings: (1) The desire for those things which are necessities for continued activities in the sphere in which the individual exists; (2) the sensory desires, or those which lend themselves to the pleasures of life; (3) those desires or wants which can be called social—love of distinction, honor or fame.

Economists have written much upon the superfluities of life, and whereas once sugar was classified as a superfluity, today the physiologist has disproved the economist and placed this commodity in the first class referred to above—a necessity for the continued activity of life. Sugar must naturally fall in the second class, for the inherent hunger for sweetness is a desire for a sensory gratification.

It is not the purpose of this article to review the ethics of prohibition or the question of whether alcoholic beverages can be considered commodities which can be classed as an economic good. It is, however, our purpose to show both from a physiological and an economic viewpoint, the close relationship which sugar and stimulants have always held, and why this relationship will always exist.

Alcoholic beverages have always been referred to as stimulants. A stimulant is anything that "produces rapid transient increase of vital energy on the organism or some part of it." From this one can see the multitudinous number of commodities which can be called stimulants. We have the drugs, some of which stimulate certain organs of the body; some energize a muscle; others affect the brain; but in general it can be said that their administration must be through the digestive system.

Foods are stimulants, some to a greater degree than others. Food performs various functions, two of which are the rebuilding of exhausted tissue and the furnishing of heat, which is a form of energy, to the body. To perform these functions the digestive system—which man as a rule treats with utmost discourtesy—must perform a certain amount of work. Sugar is one of the most easily digested of foods. The acids of the stomach change the cane sugar to two sugars, levulose and dextrose. Voila! You have almost instantly increased energy.

Sugar is a perfect stimulant and a necessary food. It satisfies a sensory desire—sweetness—one of the true tastes, of which there are four: acid, bitter, salt, sweet. The activity and endurance of the armies have long been recognized to be increased by the plentiful ration of sugar and sweetened foods.

The prohibition mandate will make it compulsory for everyone to use some other form of stimulant than alcohol. There are five stimulating commodities which unquestionably will be chosen to take the place of alcoholic beverages. I refer to the commodities which owe their universal consumption to sugar, i. e., tea, coffee, candy and non-alcoholic drinks.

It is remarkable that sugar is closely allied to these stimulating commodities. Sugar is the basis of the product or it exerts a controlling influence on its consumption. Interdependence is very marked in the latter case. * * * It is sufficient to say that but for tea, coffee and cocoa, sugar in the early centuries would not have increased in consumption so rapidly and likewise, but for sugar, the tremendous consumption of tea, coffee and cocoa would not have grown to such a remarkable volume. * * *

In comparing sugar with alcohol it is a reasonable thing that alcohol in alcoholic beverages must be made from some member of the sugar family. The point has been made by some writers that in the stomach the digestive action on sugar produces alcohol. It has been stated above what this digestive action really is. As soon as this chemical action is complete the levulose and the dextrose produced are burned up. Were it true that alcohol is produced it would indicate a most unnatural and unhealthy condition which should receive medical attention at once. It has always been an open question whether the stimulating effect of the sugar in wines was not of greater dietetic value than that of the alcohol it contained. Unfermented grape juice is given to patients when no other food can be retained. The same is true of oranges, in this last epidemic of influenza oranges were at a premium because the energy due to the instant availability of the sugar in them made the demand greater than the supply.

The unfermented beverages are rapid energizers due to the sugar contained. If these beverages were made of water, flavoring and an artificial sweetener, their popularity would not have lasted, but it is the renewed vitality which one perhaps unconsciously gets which makes these products most valuable.

Candy is another stimulant. The tons upon tons of chocolate consumed by the armies "over there" bear testimony to the efficiency of sugar as a stimulant. Statistics show that candy has always replaced alcoholic beverages in those sections which have "gone dry," and the consumption has gone up in leaps and bounds.

The question will be asked why sugar is such a great stimulant. The answer is: Sugar is one of the most easily digested foods. It produces heat—1,810 calories per pound. Heat is a form of energy.

The five commodities I have mentioned will be the most popular stimulants when prohibition is in effect. But the basic stimulant will be the sugar they contain and any product which contains sugar will be popular.

NO SUBSTITUTES

From the Creamery Journal.

That there are no substitutes for dairy foods is a fact that cannot be driven home too hard or too often. Even those creamery patrons who would bite off their own nose to spite their face by selling their butterfat to the creamery and then going to the corner grocery and buying substitutes to take home for their own table, need some of these facts brought home to them, as much as the average city consumer.

One writer has attempted to show that butterfat values during the recent period of high prices was entirely too high, and as proof has cited the fact that you could peer into the farmers' sleds as they were starting home and in nine cases out of ten you would find butter substitutes stored away for use on their home table.

Although in our opinion this estimate is overdrawn, the fact remains that too many farmers depending on the dairy cow for support do this very thing. Then how can they logically insist that Mrs. Average City Housewife call for butter when the farmer producers are among the first to fall for the substitute?

Moreover, when the city consumer is continually confronted with the advertising propaganda of the substitute people in street cars, in window displays, newspapers and sign board ads, it is little less than can be expected if they take up the use of substitutes, unless at the same time they are shown the value of the real article.

There is only one way that such propaganda can be met and that is through a vigorous campaign of advertising the merits of dairy products. Actually, with the comeback that we have—there are no substitutes for dairy foods—it is a matter of deep concern and regret that those who are beholden to the dairy cow for support have not awakened sooner to the opportunity of pushing their business through the medium of advertising. Milk and its products have been such common articles of the diet that we have taken too much for granted, and have thereby opened the way for the entering of substitute competition. Certainly our failure to advertise dairy products has not been because our products lacked merits of real value to advertise. If the oleo people or some standard automobile manufacturer or the makers of P. A. smoking tobacco for instance had half as much opportunity to advertise the merits of their goods as have the manufacturers and producers of dairy products, they would long ago have capitalized the situation and had the consumer literally swimming in milk, because they realize the benefits to be realized through consistent and persistent advertising.

So even though we're a little late and slow, there is the old adage that "it's better late than never." So we once again urge each and every creamery to support their local, state and national dairy councils and organizations backing them up in the efforts that are being started along this line. You need the help that such organized effort can give you, and at the same time your support is essential to the success of the movement. Remember there are no substitutes for dairy foods—a fact we must not fail to impress on the consuming public.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED IN FEBRUARY.

But six prosecutions were brought by agents of the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture during the month of February, thirty-seven less than were ordered during the preceding month.

Three prosecutions were brought against violators of the cream and milk regulations—1 for the sale of cream low in fat; 1 for the sale of milk low in fats and solids, and 1 for the sale of watered milk. These suits were brought in Allegheny and Bedford counties.

One Beaver county dealer was prosecuted for the sale of fish unfit for food purposes, and another dealer of the same county was prosecuted for the sale of "Red Grape," an intoxicating drink sold for a non-intoxicating beverage.

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF FOOD AND DRUG CONTROL AGENCIES.

DR. J. S. ABBOTT, CHEMIST IN CHARGE, BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The desire to prevent adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs was not always directed by a knowledge of the importance of doing so through proper agencies. The enforcement of a law is fundamentally an executive function. The work of schools, colleges and universities, and for the most part the work of Boards of Agriculture is educational and investigational. Food and drug control agencies in this country, except in a few states, are neither independent executive departments nor bureaus of purely executive departments. Some of them are independent executive departments; some are bureaus of Departments of Agriculture; some, of Departments of Health; some, of Agricultural Experiment Stations; some are made up of parts of Departments of Health and of college faculties; some are in or a part part of the office of the Secretary of State; some are made up of the Department of Health, of the sheriffs, of some of the teachers in State Universities; in some states, there are two separate agencies authorized to enforce the same kinds of laws; in some states, the pharmacists are enforcing pharmacy and drug laws; dairy commissioners, directed to promote dairying, are also enforcing laws against the adulteration and misbranding of milk; and in some states, the Department of Health reports violations of the food and drug laws to the Commissioner of Agriculture, who passes upon them and sends them to the attorneys for prosecution.

In Pennsylvania, the food, feed, drug, and milk laws are enforced by four separate agencies independent of each other, though the food and feed bureaus are in the Board of Agriculture.

In Kansas, these laws are enforced by the State Board of Health, and by the Dairy Commissioner and the Director of the Agricultural Experiment Station of the State Agricultural College. The analytical work is done for the State Board of Health by the University of Kansas and by the Kansas Agricultural College.

So far as it is known to your Committee there has never been any serious discussion of these problems by any association of food, feed and drug officials. Neither has any single official ever attempted a comprehensive analysis of these problems for the information and guidance of other officials. Let us hope that some one will soon be constrained to set to work at this problem and give us something, in the language of Fichte, to stir us to a manlier mode of thought, to a stronger sense of the dignity and worth of this new world movement, and to a more ardent zeal to fulfill our mission. Then we shall strive to put these agencies in the right place in harmony with the fundamental principles of our form of government.

A brief paragraph upon this subject by Arthur Lefevre in his great book, "The Organization and Administration of a State's Institutions of Higher Education," should be given more than passing attention by legislative bodies and food and drug control officials. Speaking of the functions of the A. & M. College of Texas, he says:

There is certainly one thing that has been put upon the A. and M. College (of Texas) from which it ought to be freed, even if its resources were unlimited. At present the college is charged with "the administration of the feed control law." That matter properly appertains to an executive department of the state government. It was a fundamental mistake to attach it to an educational institution. The feed control law cannot be administered without alert prosecution of willful violators of the law. Of course the main object should be to prevent infractions of the law. This great State, with its population of four millions, needs a vigorous administration of wise laws for the protection of the people against injurious or fraudulent substances in food, drugs, and feed for animals. Such protection is as essential to good government as the prevention of false weights and measures or counterfeited money. But all these are functions that can be rightly discharged only by the executive department of the government. No educational institution should be required to administer any general law and any such institution having thoughtlessly sought or acquiesced in such an incompatibility, should clear itself of the impropriety as promptly as possible. It is to be hoped that the next Legislature will establish in the executive branch of the government a pure food and drug department to have charge of all germane affairs. It should be equipped for full efficiency in its double function—the scientific ascertainment of the facts, and the enforcement of the law. The commissioner in charge of such a department should be appointed by the governor, and should combine in himself the scientific attainments needed to organize and control a staff of chemists, bacteriologists, etc., and the knowledge and the courage necessary to prosecute successfully willful violators of the law.

So much in the way of bringing to your serious consideration the question of the proper place of such an agency. Let us now consider the problems and the principles of organization and administration of such agencies. We would emphasize the fact that organization and administration are not one and the same thing—a fallacy that is by no means always avoided in every serious consideration of this subject. It not infrequently is the case that a good organizer is a poor administrator and vice versa. There are some very poor organizations that are most efficiently administered. But this can not be offered as an excuse for a poor organization. A food and drug control agency should be a true organism and not merely a combination of parts, and these parts so loosely connected physically and professionally that spontaneous mutual service among them is impossible.

In general nearly every food and drug control agency in America consists of three parts, and rightly so; viz., an administrative officer, a staff of analysts, and a staff of inspectors. Thus far they are good. It is not uncommon, however, that these parts are so far removed from each other geographically or by virtue of a bad administrative arrangement that co-operation of a necessary character between them is difficult if not impossible. The administrative officers' headquarters is, in some organizations, in one place; each of the several analysts' in another place; and each of the several inspectors' in still another place. These parts, even when they are in the same building, may be far apart in the performance of their respective duties. It is a fact that the only information concerning a sample submitted to a chemist for analysis in some organizations is simply a number placed upon it by an inspector. The theory upon which this practice is based is that this procedure prevents anybody from charging the chemist with doing any crooked work. It is defended as wise tact, whereas it is evidence of a lack of courage. It is in fact an insult to the chemist and a fault of administration.

Wherever the parts of an organization may be located, in different cities or in the same building, they should constitute a true organism. We cannot better define a true organism, the kind we have in mind, than by quoting Arthur Lefevre again, as follows:

In an organism it is not sufficient that there should be a separate agency for discharging every essential function, nor is the right idea completed by adding the conception of the proper autonomy of each organ. Genuine organization requires, besides both of those characteristics, that every organ should sympathize and co-operate with every other organ. The administrative organ of the entire organism can not fully or rightly discharge its function unless that condition exists.

Accepting this definition of a true organism as a sound one, the administrative officer will (unless the legislative body has done so and settled the matter itself) proceed to a consideration of the best location of the several parts of the organization which he is constructing in order to secure a maximum of efficiency. Will he establish a single office as headquarters in which the several parts will be housed and be in immediate contact, according to the arrangement in Texas, North Dakota, Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and in a few other states, or will he locate these divisions in different parts of the state according to the arrangement in Pennsylvania, New York, Kansas, and others? And to whom shall these parts be responsible officially? Shall the analysts, for illustration, be in the exclusive employ of the state and under the immediate direction of the Food and Drug Commissioner, as in the case of Massachusetts, Louisiana, Virginia and others, or shall they be private analysts who either are paid so much for the analysis of each sample submitted to them, as in the case of Pennsylvania, or are paid a salary by the State which they supplement by their private analytical and consulting work, as in the case of Missouri. Or shall the analytical work be parceled out to the several colleges of the State and be done by the teachers in such colleges, as in the case of Kansas.

Similar questions might appropriately be raised with respect to the food and drug inspectors.

After the organization of the food and drug control agency is properly conceived, or not as the case may be, and its location established in harmony with the function it is authorized to perform, or not as the case may be, the problems of administration are of supreme and continuous importance. The chief administrative officer may or may not have any voice in the matters of the location and organization of the agency. The legislative bodies may settle all or a part of these questions. Whether they be settled right or wrong, the administrative officer will be held responsible for a wise and efficient administration of the law.

What manner of man should the administrative officer be and what are his most important duties? Without attempting to answer these questions with that degree of thoroughness that their importance demands, and without attempting to give you our own personal opinions on these questions, your Committee will submit for your consideration the opinions of some reputable writers on the subject of administrative officers in general. In the book by Arthur Lefevre, previously referred to, President Alderman of the University of Virginia is quoted as follows concerning the characteristics that should manifest themselves in a college president. What he says of such an officer will apply for the most part to a Food and Drug Commissioner.

"The conception of a president as an autocrat on the bridge is an error * * * * Between the president and faculty * * * a loyal, hearty, helpful relation should exist. If he depends on himself alone he will do but little and that little not very well. His opinions must gain their weight from their wisdom rather than from their source. His true strength lies in the power to divine the value of others rather than in any power of his own of action or of speech. For him there must be the open mind, the sympathetic spirit, the patient temper, the sleepless eye; and his power should be commensurate with his responsibility."

Director Davenport of the University of Illinois indicates an important duty of a college president in these words. They also apply largely to a Food and Drug Commissioner. His duty is:

"The representation of the university before the public through addresses, and through the wider fields of activity that only the president can occupy. New lines of work, broader policies, a larger public service, and the thousand and one new things that do not occur to the men I have been talking about, and could not be performed by them if they did. * * * There is a service outward that can be rendered only by the president acting for the university as a whole. Besides this there is a service that is inward to the university that no department, no college, and no officer but the president can render. It is imperative that some great mind be free to work out from time to time new conceptions for the upbuilding of the university as conditions change, and that these energies be not wasted by the daily drain of distracting detail." * * * * *

"I place a plea for presidential leisure and a protest against a system that ties a president down to the business of daily directions."

Concerning the manner of handling men, he says:

"While many good men have been spoiled and their work ruined by too much direction, there is no case on record of securing the service of a genius out of a stick by the injection of any sort of administrative virus. Men grow and develop under responsibility, and they are at their best under a feeling that a great public trust devolves upon them * * * * Any man is a better man when feeling a personal sense of responsibility. If there is anything in a man this course will bring it out. Therefore give him every opportunity with a free hand and in good time he will demonstrate either his worth or his worthlessness."

An administrative officer, of course, must not only be interested in his work, but must manifest such an interest by every appropriate means. If he proceeds with dowdy indifference or slipshod imbecility or in any manner shows a lack of interest in his work or regards it of subordinate importance, this spirit will manifest itself sooner or later in his assistants unless they be super men. "An army of lions led by a stag will not be an army of lions," says Napoleon. An administrative officer's assistants, however, must not expect him alone to create a proper esprit de corps. They have a responsibility themselves in whatever esprit de corps obtains. Harrington Emerson says:

"There is at least one large business aggregation in the United States in which a strike is unthinkable because it is a coveted privilege to be admitted to it as a worker, a catastrophe to be cast out, and so high is the morale that the workers themselves make and maintain standards of conduct far stricter than any usual employer would dare to enforce, although he may print and post rule after rule."

Of more interest to food and drug control agencies than a discussion of the foregoing problems, some of which are beyond their control, would doubtless be a discussion of the plans of work, or methods of carrying on inspection work, or just how a new agency, or an old one for that matter, should undertake to find violations of the law, and to prevent violations of the law. The Bureau of Chemistry is preparing a book on this subject and it will doubtless be a valuable contribution to the scanty literature on food and drug control. Your committee will not at this time enter into a discussion of this phase of the administration of food and drug laws. It is presented to you for discussion now or at a later date as suits your pleasure.

There are many other phases of organization and administration which for lack of time have not so much as been mentioned, and which are of the utmost importance, such as:

The training and experience of analysts.
 The training and experience of inspectors.
 The training and experience of administrative officers.
 The appointment, tenure of office, politics, religion, personality, etc., of such officials.
 Should these agencies have a staff of legal advisers.
 The source of revenue for expenses.
 The license system of control.
 The tax feature of control.
 Relation of these agencies to each other.
 Business management.

Let us hope that some philanthropist or philanthropic agency will soon set some one to the task of a philosophical discussion of this subject which hitherto has been so sadly neglected. The day of propaganda has about passed in so far as legislation is concerned. The laws we have need refining in spots. In the main, they are good and workable. But there is much room for improvement in organization and administration of food and drug control agencies in America.

ADULTERATED SOFT DRINKS.

The following letter is self-explanatory:

William T. Phillips, Editor, The American Bottler, 218-220 East 37th Street, New York City.

Dear Sir: I have your favor of the 31st, and in reply thereto permit me to say that at the meeting of the Central Atlantic States Dairy, Food and Drug Officials Association at the Adelphia Hotel, Philadelphia, I opened the discussion on "Administrative Problems With Reference to Bottled Sodas." This I did by saying what would happen after July 1st when the country would go dry, and stated that under all sorts of names, trade and coined, so-called non-alcoholic drinks would be prepared and sold which upon analysis would prove to be alcoholic and intoxicating, and that this was a matter the Food Control officials had better prepare for and be ready to meet.

I also stated under the discussion which followed my opening remarks, that there were one hundred million dollars invested in this country in the soft drink industry and that the legitimate trade had no right to compete with the cheap, unsanitary joints, often located in cellars and unsanitary places and run by unsanitary people who dispensed their concoctions in the poorer sections of our large cities for one and two cents a drink; that it was not fair to the legitimate trade that had built large sanitary plants with the most modern equipment, using pure and wholesome materials. My remarks had reference to two phases of the business and did not refer to the legitimate bottler, but protected him.

As you know, there is now on sale in certain dry counties so-called soft drinks which contain from two to three per cent. alcohol. This will get worse after July 1st.

I further stated that the ice cream industry represented fifty million dollars fifteen years ago and it has grown until now it represents one hundred and fifty million dollars, and that the soft drink or soda water industry was increasing with leaps and bounds and the people who are spending their money to improve this line of business by building modern sanitary plants should be encouraged and not compelled to compete with the bottlers and vendors who manufacture their product in unsanitary places and sell their so-called soft drinks to children. This is especially true in the poorer and crowded districts of our large cities where some of the beverages can be purchased for one and two cents a drink. Many of these preparations contain dirt, germs and sometimes dope, and are undermining the health of helpless children.

I also stated that something drastic should be done to protect the innocent little victims.

This is substantially my address and I have no objection to you publishing it if you so desire. Very truly,

JAMES FOUST,
 Commissioner.

ADVERTISING AND SALESMANSHIP.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT FROM THE U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Advertising and salesmanship are two important factors in the successful marketing of a product. Advertising has been defined as "Silent salesmanship." and there is no doubt that judicious and appropriate advertising has a very suggestive and often convincing influence upon the customer, and when properly used may greatly increase the demand for a product. The results obtained from advertising campaigns made by the large creameries and distributors are evidence of their value. Among the various methods employed are advertisements of private brands of butter in newspapers, on street-car signs, bill boards, retail show cards, and demonstrations at retail stores, food shows, and by house-to-house canvassing.

Salesmanship is the art of merchandising and is the basis of successful marketing. Its importance often has not been appreciated by the country creameries, and their butter has been obliged to compete not only against the products of other creameries and the manufacturers of butter substitutes, but also against the salesmanship employed in pushing the sale of these branded and trade-marked products. In a business with a selling organization it is generally recognized that salesmanship gets business, while service, quality, and price hold it. In marketing the products of a small country creamery, which does not have a private brand and in which the identity of the manufacturer of the product is lost in the wholesale distribution of it, it is impossible for a creamery to employ either advertising or salesmanship in the ultimate distribution. With selling organizations for distributing private brands or State brands it is different, and both advertising and salesmanship may be employed effectively. It is highly important in marketing a branded product that a certain standard of quality be maintained in the product, that a distinctive brand be adopted, and a sanitary and attractive package be used.

SUMMARY

A knowledge of the various market requirements, marketing methods, and marketing facilities is essential for the successful marketing of creamery butter.

Particular attention should be given to the market requirements as regards quality of butter and size and style of packages. Critical markets require a clean-flavored, firm-bodied, well-made piece of butter for which they pay the highest prices. Butter of inferior quality is discriminated against by critical buyers and usually sells at prices considerably below the better grades.

The use of neat and attractive containers, standardized to a uniform size and style, is highly desirable both for local and foreign markets. Carelessly packed butter has not only a poor appearance but also usually brings a lower price.

The branding of bulk butter packages (tubs and cubes) with the gross tare, net weight, and churning number greatly facilitates the handling and inspection of butter in the market.

The use of consumer's packages for butter is increasing. A standardization of these, particularly the cartons, is especially desirable.

Market grades for butter have been established by a number of wholesale produce organizations. While these conform quite closely to a uniform standard it is generally conceded that butter which will pass in some markets for a certain grade may be classed differently in another, owing to a different standard of quality which the butter inspector may use.

The employment of butter inspectors and the maintenance of market inspection is at present provided in the wholesale markets by the organization of wholesale butter distributors. It has been suggested that the promulgation of Government grades for butter and the maintenance of a Federal inspection service would facilitate market distribution and the establishment of more accurate quotations on creamery butter.

Quotations for butter are determined in most markets by market-reporting agencies. Among the market quotations which have the widest trading influences are those established at New York, Chicago and Elgin, Ill., and San Francisco.

The distribution of butter in the larger cities is generally effected by wholesale distributors commonly termed wholesale receivers or jobbers, who supply the retailers, hotels and restaurants. The gross margins taken by butter distributors depend upon a number of factors, such as kind of business, volume of business, extent of charge accounts, competition, and general market conditions.

Approximately one-tenth of the market receipts of butter is placed in public cold storage. Chicago, because of its location, is considered the most important place for the storage of butter. The cost of financing and handling butter in storage is approximately one-fourth cent per pound per month.

Regular, schedule refrigerator rail service is provided for butter in the more highly developed dairy sections. Express service often is employed for shipping to near-by markets and may be used in combination and refrigerator freight service in reaching the more distant markets. Co-operation among creameries has proved of value in obtaining and using refrigerator service where creameries are located in close proximity to each other.

State brands for butter which creameries are permitted to use when they have complied with State requirements have been adopted by Minnesota, Iowa, and Michigan. They are intended to convey a guaranty of purity and quality in the butter which will be of mutual benefit to both the producer and the consumer.

The establishment of brands is essential for effective advertising or in retaining the identity of the manufacturer of a product. Appropriate advertising and salesmanship are also two vital factors in successful market distribution. In marketing a branded product it is highly important that a sanitary and attractive package be used and that a certain standard of quality be maintained.

TWELVE YEARS OF PROGRESS.

In a statement of the work of the dairy and food division of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture for the past year, along with a record of the operation of the division from 1907 to 1918, inclusive, James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, gives some information which affords an idea of the growth of the division's work, its cost and the benefits that have accrued.

The business has increased steadily in volume from year to year, with the result that last year was a record breaker along all the lines of its activity. The receipts from all sources during the year were $488,855.12, but in this connection it is interesting to note that only a very small portion of this large sum was collected in the form of fines. Oleomargarine licenses netted $461,390.01 and cold storage licenses $3,300, a total of $464,690.01, leaving the receipts from fines but $24,165.11.

With comparatively few exceptions the fines were imposed for local violations. The enforcement of the laws during the previous years had already brought about the breaking up of wholesale fraud and adulterations of staple prepared foodstuffs and the fines imposed in connection with this class of goods are negligible in number.

Commissioner Foust was first appointed to his present position by Governor Stuart in 1907. At that time 30 per cent. of all the prepared foodstuffs on the market was adulterated; now adulterations are rarely found and the prosecutions are chiefly directed against local violators selling such articles as ice cream, milk, vinegar, sausage and other meats and against cold storage products.

During 1918 samples collected by the agents and analyzed by the chemists of the bureau totaled 6,643 while the grand total for twelve years is 84,631. Cases terminated last year amounted to 1,133 and for twelve years 11,101.

During the first two years of Mr. Foust's administration the bureau was not self-sustaining; now the receipts are more than six times the amount of the expenditures, the former being $488,855.12 for the last year and the latter $81,586.31. In the twelve year period the receipts have aggregated $2,408,957.89 and the expenses have been $952,325.91. The receipts are deposited with the state treasurer for the use of the Commonwealth and the expenditures are provided for by appropriation.

The laws placed under the dairy and food commissioner for enforcement are police regulations, nothing more, nothing less. The quality and quantity of food for eight millions of people are important and to keep the food pure and free from adulterations and to prevent misbranding is essential; this is the work of the dairy and food commissioner.

The following comparative statement, covering the years 1907 to 1918, inclusive, has been prepared:

Year.	Samples Analyzed.	Cases Terminated.	Receipts.	Expenditures.
1907.	7,400	694	$55,732 63	$78,455 88
1908.	8,300	300	54,580 62	69,908 20
1909.	6,200	797	89,504 15	83,700 00
1910.	5,594	667	110,802 05	79,631 85
1911.	8,200	1,029	120,963 48	83,083 15
1912.	7,204	1,049	133,125 49	81,858 55
1913.	6,846	1,025	173,789 78	75,587 12
1914.	4,827	1,010	225,910 73	73,271 41
1915.	8,939	1,165	279,055 40	85,901 36
1916.	5,807	1,093	303,397 03	77,931 97
1917.	8,701	1,109	373,150 48	81,320 31
1918.	6,643	1,133	488,855 12	81,586 31
	84,631	11,101	$2,408,957 89	$952,325 91

This table shows that the receipts for the year 1918, which are deposited with the state treasurer for the use of the Commonwealth, were $407,268.81 in excess of the expenditures, which are provided for by a special appropriation, and that for the entire period of twelve years the total receipts were $1,456,631.98 in excess of the expenditures.

AMERICA'S MILK PRODUCTION.

Only a small proportion of America's production of milk is condensed. The De Laval Monthly says that the distribution of milk in the United States is as follows:

- 43.1% Used as liquid milk.
- 41.0% Used for making butter.
- 5.0% Used for making cheese.
- 2.9% Used for condensed milk.
- 3.7% Used for making ice cream.
- 4.3% Used for feeding calves.

This 2.9% used by the condensers is the milk from 480,000 cows. The United States now has about 23,000,000 dairy cows. Europe has lost 22,000,000 in the last few years and there is no chance for replacement, for having no cows, there can be no calves, and no importation of cattle can be permitted for at least a year, as ship tonnage is needed for food. So it looks as though our condensers and butter makers can look forward to a big foreign business.

CANNERY NOTES,

LARD—PRESENT SITUATION.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT FROM THE U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Lard occupies the most important place among America's fats, with the possible exception of butter. Butter, however, contains only about 83 per cent. of fat, and when the amount of water and salt in it is deducted from the figures reported for the annual production of butter, lard stands first in the list of our output of animal fats and oils. Our normal production of lard is about 1,000,000,000 pounds, but this does not include the large amount made by small butchers and on the farms, which is perhaps 1,000,000,000 pounds more. At present lard is exported in greater bulk than all the other fats taken together, and even before the beginning of the European war it formed nearly 50 per cent. of our total fat and oil exports.

MODERN METHOD OF PRODUCTION.

Probably from 85 to 90 per cent. of the entire output of lard from the big packing plants, which produce about one-half of the domestic lard, is of the grade known on the boards of trade as prime steam lard. The rest is the so-called kettle-rendered lard or neutral lard. The smaller packers, local butchers, and hog raisers, who make the other half, usually produce only the kettle-rendered grade. The distinction between steam and kettle-rendered lard is not entirely one of process, as, in the packing houses, at least, only the leaf and back fat are kettle-rendered, all the other fats going into steam lard.

In making kettle-rendered lard the leaf fat is pulled from the carcasses while they are still warm and immediately chilled. When thoroughly cooled, the fat tissue is hashed fine and heated in steam-jacketed kettles until the clear fat, in the form of a light yellow oil at this temperature (250° F.), separates from the tissues. It is then salted and allowed to stand until the fine particles of the fat membranes separate out. Finally, after one or two more settlings, it is drawn off hot into the shipping packages and placed at once in a freezer. The cracklings left in the rendering kettle are either pressed to obtain the residual lard or put into the steam lard tanks. This rendering of lard in steam-jacketed kettles is merely a safe and convenient modification of the old home method of making lard by cooking the hog fat in a big pan over an open fire. The kettle-rendered product, therefore, has that characteristic lard flavor so highly prized by those who do not like the new type of lard substitutes.

Neutral lard, or simply neutral, as the packers call it, is made from the first grades of leaf fat by cooking in much the same manner as the kettle-rendered lard. It is, however, cooked at a lower temperature, from 126° to 128° F., so that it retains practically no hog flavor. It is used almost exclusively in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Steam lard, as its name implies, is rendered by means of live steam. The chopped fats are charged into large steel tanks, and after the cover has been fastened down live steam is turned in through pipe at the bottom of the tanks. When the cooking has proceeded to the point where the melted lard separates from the fat membranes, the steam is turned off and the water and solids allowed to settle, after which the lard is drawn off from the top and the water and tankage dumped out at the bottom. As some darkening of the lard occurs during cooking and its flavor is often too strong, it is customary to bleach and deodorize it by the processes already described.

Lard oil, which is used as an illuminant in signal lights and miners' lamps and as a lubricant in machine shops, is made by chilling lard, and sometimes other fats, such as horse oil, and pressing out the liquid olein from the higher-melting stearin. The olein constitutes the lard oil. The remaining stearin is often mixed with whole lard to make it firmer in warm weather and is also used in making compound lard.

INCREASING THE YIELD.

The production of lard depends upon the weight of hogs slaughtered. As ways and means for increasing hog production in this country have been fully covered in another publication of the Department of Agriculture, only such points as have a direct bearing upon the increase in our supply of lard will be mentioned here. It is estimated that the number of hogs slaughtered in 1917 was about 1,000,000 less than during the preceding year. Allowing 14 pounds of lard per hog butchered, this would mean that 14,000,000 pounds less lard were produced in 1917 than in 1916. Actual returns made to the Food Administration by the packing houses show that 218,170,000 pounds less lard (not including neutral) were made in 1917 than in 1916. Such a situation is, of course, very serious, especially under existing conditions. The United States Department of Agriculture, in conference with many of the State agricultural institutions and farmers, however, set 15 per cent. as the minimum average increase in the production of hogs for 1918, and there is no reason why we should not secure this increase. Probably very little lard is wasted in the packing houses, where every effort is made to obtain as large a yield as possible. It is true, however, that if commercial conditions were different and the boards of trade recognized any grade of lard except prime steam more of the output of the packing houses might be converted into kettle-rendered lard. While this would not increase the total production appreciably, it would give us more of the better product and the value of the by-products, cracklings, and tankage would lower the expense of making the lard.

We must look, then, to the small butcher and the farmer for more pounds of lard per pound of hogs slaughtered. Just the little extra effort required to press the cracklings from the rendering kettle in a simple hand press would insure a greater saving of the pure fat from the various parts of the hog. The housewife in her own home can play an important part in decreasing the consumption of lard by saving the trimmings from ham and fresh pork, trying them out, pouring off the clear grease, and grinding up the cracklings, for use in place of the straight lard in making corn bread, muffins, and other hot breads.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue collects a tax on every pound of oleomargarine, under which heading are included all butter substitutes. We have, therefore, exact figures on the production of this class of foodstuffs. In 1914 the output of oleomargarine was about 123,000,000 pounds; in 1916 it rose to nearly 185,000,000 pounds; while in 1917 it was over 271,000,000 pounds. Our average annual exportation during the three pre-war years was a little over 3,000,000 pounds, about 2 per cent. of the amount manufactured. Until 1915 the oleomargarine exports from this country had for several years shown a gradual decrease, but with the beginning of the war they doubled, and in the fiscal year 1915 we sent to foreign countries 5,250,000 pounds.

The butter substitutes now on the American market are of two classes—the true oleomargarine, which contains oleo oil and neutral lard, and the vegetable margarines, which contain no animal fats. The vegetable margarines are quite commonly called “nut margarine,” being composed largely of cocoanut and peanut oils. Both types of margarines show a wide variety of composition. Not only has each manufacturer his own secret formula, but even the ingredients in the same brand may vary with different seasons and with the fluctuations in the market price of the fats and oils used. In the highest grade of oleomargarine sometimes as much as 20 per cent. of butter is used, and the vegetable oils may be entirely omitted.

The same general process, however, is employed for all of them. This consists in ripening whole milk, or skim milk, usually with a pure “starter” as is done in creamery butter making, adding the animal or vegetable oils, or both, and then churning, graining, salting, and working, as described in greater detail under cocoanut oil (page 21).

Aside from the use of tallows in lard and butter substitutes, and, to a less extent, in sausage, suet puddings, mincemeat, and similar foods, large quantities of the inedible grades are required by the soap maker and the manufacturer of leather dressings and of lubricating greases, as well as in other technical industries. The introduction of the hydrogenation process for hardening oils has made it possible to produce hard soaps from vegetable oils without the addition of as much tallow as was formerly required if the soap maker desired anything but a soft soap. This has probably brought about some decrease in the amount of tallow employed in the soap trade. As a people, however, we are demanding each year more soap so the total quantity of animal fats going into our soap kettles is greater rather than less than it was five years ago.

HARRISBURG, PENNA.:

The present Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Fred Rasmussen, came to America in his young manhood and was employed by the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad as a bridge carpenter. In Denmark as a growing boy and youth he had been engaged in the business of farming, a wholly congenial occupation. His thoughts naturally turned toward the soil and after a year's experience on the railroad he again turned his attention to farming, and for a year was employed on a dairy farm, taking care of twenty cows and directing a milk route. For two winters he attended a country school.

In the winter of 1902 Mr. Rasmussen entered Iowa State College. After completing the four years' course in Agriculture, he accepted a position at Purdue University, having charge of the University creamery during the ensuing twelve months. He likewise acted as instructor in creamery butter making. In the autumn of 1906 he joined the staff of Iowa State College, and for the next year was assistant professor of dairying at that institution. In the fall of 1907 he accepted the professorship of dairying at New Hampshire College. Here he remained for nine years, taking up his work as professor of Dairy Husbandry at State College in 1916, where he remained until his acceptance of the post of Secretary of the Department of Agriculture of Pennsylvania, to which important position he was appointed by Governor Sproul on January 22, 1919. This position sought the man in this instance, the appointment having been made solely because of the splendid qualifications of the appointee.

While Mr. Rasmussen was professor of Dairy Husbandry at State College, the United States entered upon the great war. Early in January, 1918, he took up work with the United States Food Administration for the State of Pennsylvania. It will be remembered that Herbert C. Hoover was administrator of the work for the entire country, while Howard Heinz had control of the work in Pennsylvania. Professor Rasmussen worked under the direction of Mr. Heinz. About this time he was asked by the American Red Cross to go to France as a member of a committee to establish dairies at the base hospitals for the use of the American Expeditionary Force. He was also asked by the National War Council of the Y. M. C. A., to outline and supervise courses in dairying for the instruction of our soldiers in France, under the supervision of the Education Commission.

In addition to his experience in the several states, Mr. Rasmussen spent four summers in Europe studying agricultural conditions in Switzerland, Holland and Denmark. One of these summers was devoted to work for the United States Department of Agriculture. The result of this work will be found in Bulletin 129, published by the Bureau of Animal Industry. In recent years he has paid special attention to the economic factors influencing the development of agriculture and the cost of milk production. On this subject he published several Bulletins while in New Hampshire.

It will be perceived from this brief and hurried outline of his work thus far, that Professor Rasmussen has had a unique and varied experience in agriculture. In his childhood and early youth his bent toward agricultural and dairy problems was confirmed by his work on a large dairy farm. His experience in agriculture in the Middle West, coupled with his nine years of experience and study in the production and marketing of milk in New England, particularly fits him for the responsible position which he now holds in the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Elsewhere in this number of the Bulletin will be found the Act passed by the General Assembly and approved by the Governor, reorganizing the Department of Agriculture. Professor Rasmussen was the inspiring cause of the improvements wrought in the department by this act. In co-operation with Governor Sproul, he has produced an organization which must prove very much more efficient than the former law provided with its divided responsibilities could possibly have been. It is likewise worthy of note that Professor Rasmussen prepared, presented and had enacted into law, a bill for the reorganization of the Bureau of Markets, the effect of which will be to vastly increase the efficiency of that important bureau. One of the chief purposes of the Act is to provide a more efficient method of getting the products of the soil to the consumer more directly and at less cost, while giving the producer at least a share of the profits now absorbed by the middleman.

Professor Rasmussen is an original thinker. He is very patient, very attentive, very considerate with all who approach him or who have dealings with his department. But he is also possessed of an independent mind and reaches and enforces his own conclusions. He will be instrumental in producing many changes for the benefit of farmers, dairymen and the consuming public.

AN ACT

Reorganizing the Department of Agriculture, creating bureaus therein, and providing for the proper administration thereof.

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c., That the Department of Agriculture be, and the same is hereby, reorganized as hereinafter provided; that the executive head of said department shall be known as the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of four years, and who shall receive an annual salary of eight thousand ($8,000) dollars. He shall give bond to the Commonwealth in the sum of twenty-five thousand ($25,000) dollars.

Section 2. The said Department of Agriculture shall have power to encourage and promote the development of agriculture, horticulture, and kindred industries; to take such measures as may be deemed advisable concerning the causes, methods of prevention, control, and eradication of diseases of poultry, animals, and plants; to collect and publish facts relating to the transportation and marketing of farm products, and to promote the better marketing of such products; to enforce all laws relating to the manufacture and sale of foods and drinks; to make chemical analyses and examinations of agricultural products, products used for agricultural purposes, and food products, or the ingredients used in any of them; to collect, compile, and publish statistics relating to the agricultural industries and interests of the State; to inquire into, and report upon, any matters pertaining to the economics of agriculture in the State. To better carry out the powers herein given, the said Department of Agriculture shall have all the power and authority heretofore conferred by law upon the Department of Agriculture.

Section 3. There shall be a Deputy Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the Governor, and who shall perform such duties as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate. In the absence or incapacity of the Secretary of Agriculture, or vacancy in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Deputy Secretary shall act as the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall have all the powers and perform all the duties imposed by law upon the Secretary of Agriculture. He shall receive a salary of five thousand ($5,000) dollars per year.

APPROVED—The 8th day of May, A. D. 1919.

WM. C. SPROUL.

The foregoing is a true and correct copy of the Act of the General Assembly No. 101.

CYRUS E. WOODS,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

RECENT FOOD LEGISLATION.

In another part of this number of the Bulletin will be found the act of assembly reorganizing the Department of Agriculture. It should be read carefully by every citizen interested in this important department of the State government. It is a decided improvement upon previous legislation and results may be expected.

This reorganization law abolishes the State Board of Agriculture, makes an end of the Agricultural Commission and places upon the Secretary of Agriculture complete responsibility for the administration of the department. This is a great improvement over the previous system of divided authority. The law creates six bureaus, as follows: Bureau of Animal Industry, Bureau of Plant Industry, Bureau of Markets, Bureau of Foods, Bureau of Chemistry and Bureau of Statistics. It defines the duties of each. Very little change is made in the duties of the various bureau heads, but all are under the direct control of the Secretary of Agriculture and subject to his direction.

The General Assembly passed and Governor Sproul approved a bill amending the act prohibiting the sale of eggs which are decayed or decomposed and unfit for food, providing that every egg-opening establishment must take out a license. This license is to be issued by the Director of the Bureau of Foods and will cost fifty dollars a year. It is believed it will be of much benefit to the people.

All rotten eggs must be placed in containers painted a bright red color and no rotten eggs can be opened in an establishment where good eggs are opened, or where food products are prepared or manufactured. This amended law requiring a license gives the Bureau of Foods full control over the rotten egg industry. Rotten eggs have a commercial value and are used for tanning leather which is employed in the manufacture of gloves and similar products.

The Sausage law was also amended so as to permit the addition of five per cent. of water and ice for the purpose of facilitating grinding, chopping and mixing, but it shall in no case exceed that quantity.

Another notable new act passed by the General Assembly of 1919 and approved by Governor Sproul relates to the traffic in eggs. It prohibits the sale, or having in possession with intent to sell, eggs for and as fresh that are not fresh, as may be discovered upon proper test. This law will prevent the sale as of fresh eggs held for months by the water glass or lime method. It will also prevent the sale of eggs as fresh eggs that are sometimes held out of storage for two weeks and then placed in cold storage for twenty-nine days, but are not subject to the cold-storage law because they have not been in cold-storage for thirty days or over.

This law will also prevent the sale of eggs as fresh which are cold-storage eggs and have been removed from the crates which bear the marks showing that they are cold-storage eggs, and the length of time they were in storage, and are being sold from other containers, such as baskets or boxes. There is no chemical method by which a chemist can detect that such eggs have been in cold storage. Neither can such cold storage eggs be detected by their physical condition, but it can be ascertained that they are decidedly stale eggs. Such eggs are wholesome and can be used for baking purposes, but they are not fresh eggs and cannot be sold as such under the new law.

The Non-Alcoholic Drink act has been amended as to labeling only. It now provides that a cap label showing the product to be a compound, imitation, or blend, as the case may be, shall be considered a proper label.

A new cold-storage law has been enacted, taking the place of the act of 1913. The principal change is in the time limit allowed for storing products. This has been increased to twelve months on meats, poultry, game, eggs, butter and fish. In other respects the new law differs very little from the old one. It is a good, comprehensive measure.

Upon the whole, the Legislature of 1919 did no harm to the food laws of the Commonwealth. On the other hand, it increased their efficiency in some particulars, and especially in the reconstruction of the Department of Agriculture and the stringent legislation concerning eggs.

THEY WANT DR. ALSBERG.

The next annual meeting of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials will be held at the Commodore Hotel, New York City, the first week in September.

Advices from the members in all parts of the nation are to the effect that they hope to prevail upon Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, to accept the presidency of the association for the coming year.

The State Food Control officials will insist upon Dr. Alsberg accepting the presidency of their association for various reasons, each of which is entirely acceptable to them. He is not only a man of national reputation, but also an official whose capability and fairness are recognized in every state of the union and by all who have any acquaintance with the admirable manner in which he conducts the affairs of his important office. One thing is very noticeable and very commendable. Under the jurisdiction of Dr. Alsberg the Bureau of Chemistry has been rendering every possible assistance to State Food Control officials. He has likewise proved eminently fair to the trade and has always discharged the duties of his position in an absolutely impartial way.

Dr. Alsberg has taken more than a perfunctory interest in the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials. Ever since he became head of the Federal Bureau of Chemistry, he has been attending the sessions and taking a great interest in the proceedings. His selection as president at the New York convention will strengthen the organization, add new life to its future operations and greatly enlarge its usefulness.

THE KIND FACED COW.

Little do we realize the debt we owe the cow. During the dark ages of savagery and barbarism, we find her early ancestors natives of the wild forests of the old world. As the bright rays of civilization penetrated the darkness of that early period and man called upon the cow she came forth from her seclusion to share in the efforts that gave us a greater nation and a more enlightened people. For two thousand years she has shown her allegiance to man, sharing alike in his prosperity and adversity, responding nobly to all that was done for her until through her development she became an idol of the people of her native country.

In 1492, when Columbus made his second voyage to America, the cow came with him—and from that time to the present day she has been a most potent factor in making this our own country, the greatest nation with the highest type of womanhood and manhood history has ever known.

Her sons helped till the soil of our ancestors and slowly moved the products of the farm to market. They went with man into the dense forests of the new world, helped clear them for homes, and made cultivation possible for the coming generation and when the tide of emigration turned westward, they hauled the belongings of the pioneer over the sun-scorched plains and over the great mountain ranges to new homes beyond.

AN OPEN LETTER TO BOSSY-COW

Dear Bossy-Cow: Frankly I owe more to you than I have been able to tell, face to face. There has been so much to do around the farm these summer days, that there has been no opportunity to adequately convey my deep and profound appreciation.

When I took up this old run-down farm, it was a toss-up as to whether I'd make a go of it. A man can't start fighting soil, and hard times, and stump-filled pasture land when he's three-fourths a hospital ward and one-fourth working trim. But, early in the great game, while the surrounding hills were still white with snow and the grate fire in the little front sitting room was the only welcome thing in my world, you came to the farm.

Somehow, affairs changed from the go-off. I took an awful big liking to you, Bossy-Cow. You were a pal,—a companion,—a mild-eyed, quiet, restful friend during those struggling winter days. I guess I couldn't have gotten on without you, Bossy. Remember the opening of the weather-beaten, ramshackle barn door at six, those sharp, cutting a. m.'s? As my eyes grew accustomed to the dim and uncertain light, I could see your big, patient, wondering, grey eyes peering out at me, and I could hear the crunch, crunch of the wet hay in your clean, white mouth and you pawed a wee bit, for you knew from the peck measure under my arm that I came on a mission of good cheer. We fussed around a good deal—you and me,—out there in that big, lonely, neglected barn. How you'd watch me, as with snow banking up against the one small window and powdering in at the door, I set about cleaning up things and patching fragments of harness and trying to make something out of nothing, as is a poor man's way at fighting time.

And finally spring came, Bossy.—spring with the little patch of apple and peach trees doing tolerably well as they sprayed out into big pink and white plumes of fragrant color. And the birds began to nest in the old barn and green splotches showed out yonder in the meadows and pasture land and workin' fields, and God Himself visited us at dawn one fine, clean day, to scatter violets through the dead leaves down by the spring house. Yes,—spring, Bossy, and seeds and hopes were planted, and the soil began to bulge with the wonder of the great miracle of eternal life. We began to put a little money in the bank at the village,—just a penny or so,—but it meant the beginning.

Did you help? Of course you did, Bossy. The extra milk and butter found ready sale. But it did more than that,—your being there at the start. It meant something to talk to and live for, and pet, and love, and fraternize with in the midst of bitter loneliness. It meant a living, breathing thing just across the lot to the barn. And then, after a while, when the woman came, the wife, who was to share that grim and unrelenting burden, both of us loved you in the way that old folks love little children.

Bossy-Cow, do you remember when your baby came into the life of the farm? Do you remember all four of us down the lane in the sunlight, and those unsteady legs of the new-born as it nestled up close to you all white and red-brown and beautiful? Prosperity bloomed with the clover and another spring's dogwood. There were more and more Bossy-cows, and a glistening silo, and a dairy house, and rows and rows of spotless milk cans beneath the cool trees waiting for delivery.

But our memory of you is sweetest as we saw you under the apple trees, knee-deep in fragrant grass, during those long, sleepy, sunshot, summer afternoons. You busy old muncher, you. A quid of clover makes you happy, doesn't it? And what a maternal expression you wear these days—just as if your work was about over and you had decided to devote your declining days to alfalfa, the choicest ensilage, and the occasional sugar-lumps a certain barefoot boy sneaks from the table for you. It's pretty nice out there under the apple trees. I'll admit—wouldn't mind a loaf myself.

But I'm grateful, Bossy—that's what I started out to say, that's what I wanted you to know. The sight of you nibbling at the clover this morning brought back the earlier, lonelier years when you sort of made it possible for me to keep on-to now. Bossy, you're more than a cow, you're a pal.

CONSERVE THE DAIRY COW.

The dairy cow is mankind's greatest friend. She produces man's best, most serviceable food, and one of the cheapest.

A 1200-pound steer ready for market, contains only about 360 pounds of actual food. A dairy cow at two years of age begins to yield thereafter about 900 pounds of edible nutrients a year thereafter and will continue to produce the same amount for seven years thereafter. That is, she produces during her active life, 6,300 pounds of human food. In other words it takes seventeen steers to produce the same amount of human food as a dairy cow produces during her lifetime. The steer before he pays for any of his food is a debt to his master for two years and upon payment, ceases to live, while the cow pays for her food daily as she goes.

In any program of a national food supply first and foremost consideration should be given to this remarkable natural food making machine.

On behalf of the consumer the widest publicity should be given the bulletin issued by the United States Department of Agriculture dealing with the great food value and economy of milk and milk products, and showing milk to be an economical food even at a price of fifteen cents a quart.

A plentiful stock of dairy cows means not only the quickest, richest and most continuous transformation of feed into human food, but above all it means a daily dependable supply of butterfat—the finest of all fats and forestalls the possibility of such deep distress as is experienced in the shortage of fats in Denmark. As a nation we may well be alarmed over the certainty of further depletion, when further rises in the cost of feed and aggravated shortage of labor make the production of milk wholly unprofitable or a losing venture at the very time when milk, butterfat and the products derived therefrom should be the country's greatest safeguard and reliance.

Moreover further retrogression in dairying means a shortage in animal manure, lowered soil fertility, a lower yield per acre of cereal products, an excessive rise in the price of all foodstuffs coming from the soil, and a serious derangement of our economic life. It spells distress in the keenest form.

It appears to be the duty of the government to keep stable and stimulate dairy production by intensive education of the farmer to the end that he may increase rather than decrease his stock of dairy cattle and equally intensive education of the consumer as to the food value and relative economy of milk.

MILK AND CREAM.

The following definitions and standards for milk and cream were adopted by the Joint Committee on Definitions and Standards July 30, 1917, and were approved by the Association of American Dairy, Food, and Drug Officials August 3, 1917, and by the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists November 21, 1917:

1. MILK is the whole, fresh, clean, lacteal secretion obtained by the complete milking of one or more healthy cows, properly fed and kept, excluding that obtained within fifteen days before and five days after calving, or such longer period as may be necessary to render the milk practically colostrum free.

2. SKIMMED MILK is milk from which substantially all of the milk fat has been removed.

3. CREAM, SWEET CREAM, is that portion of milk, rich in milk fat, which rises to the surface of milk on standing, or is separated from it by centrifugal force. It is fresh and clean. It contains not less than eighteen per cent (18%) of milk fat and not more than two-tenths per cent (0.2%) of acid-reacting substances calculated in terms of lactic acid.

4. WHIPPING CREAM is cream which contains not less than thirty per cent (30%) of milk fat.

5. PASTEURIZED MILK is milk that has been subjected to a temperature not lower than 145 degrees Fahrenheit for not less than thirty minutes. Unless it is bottled hot, it is promptly cooled to 50 degrees Fahrenheit or lower.

6. BUTTERMILK is the product that remains when fat is removed from milk or cream, sweet or sour, in the process of churning. It contains not less than eight and five-tenths per cent (8.5%) of milk solids, not fat.

7. HOMOGENIZED MILK OR HOMOGENIZED CREAM is milk or cream that has been mechanically treated in such a manner as to alter its physical properties, with particular reference to the condition and appearance of the fat globules.

The foregoing definitions and standards are adopted as a guide for the officials of this department in enforcing the Food and Drugs Act.

the State. Of this number 104 were against dealers who did not properly observe the rules regulating the sale of cream and milk. Ten dealers were prosecuted for the sale of cream, low in butterfat; 74 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids; 6 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids and skimmed; 5 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids and watered; 4 for the sale of milk low in fat; 2 for the sale of milk low in fat and skimmed, 2 for the sale of milk watered and 1 for the sale of milk low in solids and watered. Dealers in Allegheny, Armstrong, Beaver, Bucks, Clinton, Erie, Lackawanna, Lawrence, Lehigh, Luzerne, Lycoming, Mercer, Montgomery, Montour, McKean, Northumberland, Schuylkill, Somerset, Warren, Washington, Westmoreland, and Venango counties figured in the above cases.

For violating the pure food regulations eight dealers, in Bradford, Columbia, Huntingdon, Lawrence, Philadelphia and Somerset counties were prosecuted, as follows: 3 for sale of cherries containing sulphur dioxide; 1 for the sale of egg noodles, colored with a coal tar dye; 2 for the sale of buckwheat flour containing wheat products; 1 for the sale of cakes unfit for food purposes and 1 for the sale of dried peaches, treated with sulphur dioxide, not declared.

A Westmoreland county dealer was prosecuted for selling hamburg steak containing sulphites and six ice cream dealers in Cambria and Philadelphia counties were prosecuted for selling ice cream low in butterfat.

CONDENSED BUTTERMILK.

From the Milk Reporter.

Of all foods none are more generally used than bread and milk; they constitute the largest part of our diet, making it the "staff of life" for all of us.

Bread and milk contain the four groups of nutriment—protein, carbohydrates, fats and mineral salts—by proper compounding—balanced rations can be had to furnish the tissue and bone-building matter as well as energy for the body. Especially milk contains the unknown but invaluable accessory substances called vitamins or food hormones necessary for our diet and which give milk the dominant nutritive value. Within the last decade buttermilk has become a most important nutrient in the human diet, and excellent testimony for its usefulness can be secured everywhere.

Ordinary bread contains both protein and carbohydrates, but is not in the requisite proportion; protein is lacking and this can be supplied by the addition of condensed buttermilk.

Making bread with condensed buttermilk will improve the quality greatly and cut cost. Since the use of milk or milk products is left to the judgment of the baker, stop and consider what immense value this important dough batch ingredient adds to the bread. And figure the saving of wheat and coal and the increased keeping quality of the baked bread. Coal is saved because the milk sugar gives the loaf the desired brown color in much less time. That increases volume too, for there is much less evaporation of dough loaves in the baking oven when time and temperature are normal. The bread will therefore be more moist, more palatable and can be scaled closer to the pound limit. Double conservation—of wheat and fuel. In using condensed buttermilk the activities of the yeast are better sustained, and the addition of other cereal flours than wheat becomes more practical, for with sufficient milk to support the dough it is held in better consistency. All this has been developed by practical experiment. Condensed buttermilk can be used with equal success in all kinds of cakes, rolls, etc., and if less of the lactic acid effect is desired add from one-quarter to one-half ounce of baking soda to the water for dough making for each pound of condensed buttermilk used.

Condensed buttermilk has nearly twice the milk value as compared with ordinary sweetened condensed milk or evaporated milk, pound for pound.

RECORDS IN MILK PRODUCTION.

We breed purebred dairy cattle that we may have in the purebred cows specialized machines for the economical production of dairy products, remarks a trade journal. And we use purebred dairy bulls as sires in common herds that the productive capacity of the cows of such herds may be increased. This does not imply that purebred cattle are in all instances individually more productive than common cattle; there are weaklings in all herds, purebred as well as common. The thing to be guarded against is the effort to improve either a purebred or a common herd by using a purebred weakling.

Although this phase of the business is probably of secondary importance to the true lover of the dairy animal there is a large profit to be gained in the breeding of purebred dairy cattle. In the American dairy world results that a few years ago were almost beyond belief are today being accomplished. Records are made only to be broken and the Friesians are continually setting new figures.

EVAPORATED MILK HEALTHFUL.

The American Food Journal remarks that many well informed people are afraid to use evaporated milk lest its use cause scurvy or rickets. Not the use of evaporated milk, but too great economy in its use is believed by dietitians to be responsible for evil effects.

Scientific investigation shows that the health and growth protecting substances which are in solution in fresh whole milk are not destroyed by the process of evaporation. All of the minerals present in fresh milk are still present after evaporation. The same food substances also are there, although they have been cooked, giving to evaporated milk its peculiar flavor. Adults should have an allowance of half a pint of milk a day, children from a pint to a quart. When evaporated milk is used, however, there is a tendency to economize by using less than this amount. The ill effect is seldom noticed on the strong and vigorous children and the invalids show it in a short time. One pound of evaporated milk is equivalent to one quart of fresh milk. Milk should be treated in every form as a food, not as a beverage.

HULDA'S RECORD.

Two years ago Hulda was just an ordinary grade cow, getting on in years and with no future unless the prospect of winding up as a canner may be called a future. She was twelve years old and in 1915, so her record shows she produced only 246 pounds of butterfat.

Last year Hulda's owner joined a cow testing association and began to take a new interest in the care and feeding of his cows. In common with the others of the herd old Hulda got better care and a better balanced ration than she used to get and she began to wake up. That year as a 13-year old Hulda produced 429 pounds of butterfat. This year as a 14-year old Hulda has demonstrated what some old cows can do if they are given half a chance. Her owner tried milking her three times a day and she came through the testing year with the really remarkable record of 716 pounds of butterfat.

Hulda stands as a striking example of the practical results that farmers are getting through business organizations of their own.

BUTTER VS. IMITATIONS.

It is very gratifying and encouraging to notice the tendency among individuals in moderate circumstances to purchase more butter where heretofore they have bought imitations or so-called butter substitutes, says the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal. Jobbers of butter who deal in margarines of various descriptions as well, state that during the past year their sales of imitations were much less than for previous years and that their butter sales have materially increased, and that in the face of extremely high prices for butter. Consumers are gradually beginning to realize that even though the price of butter is higher than that of margarines it is in reality a cheaper and much more satisfactory food product. They have been brought to that realization because of the honest and consistent campaign of education that has been conducted by organizations having the interests of dairying at heart. The campaigns of such organizations, while more or less commercial in nature have been founded on absolute facts, and therefore could not help being successful. In addition the great war has shown that degeneration and deterioration result if a nation is denied dairy products as a part of its diet, the reason for which has been clearly determined through recent scientific research. Demand for dairy products of all kinds will continue to strengthen and the dairyman need never let the bogie overproduction cause him undue worry.

WAYS OF USING MILK

From the Milk Reporter.

Milk is a food as well as a drink. It is a food to be compared with meat, bread and potatoes. Of course every child should have milk to drink with his meals as well as prepared dishes containing it. When the child tires of milk the occasional addition of a small amount of cocoa to a glass of milk will change the flavor and may make the taste pleasing to the child.

The bottle of milk in the kitchen will help a great deal in preparing the meals. Cereals, such as rice, oatmeal, cornmeal and hominy grits may be cooked in milk instead of in water. A double boiler is used in the cooking. A creamy healthful dish is the result.

The housewife will find that milk will help in making attractive dishes from canned or fresh vegetables. Milk combined with vegetables makes excellent soups, creamed and scalloped dishes, souffles and croquettes. Creamed toast and gravies also require the use of milk.

Healthful, nutritious deserts for children usually have milk for their foundation. Ice cream, cornstarch, bread, tapioca and junket puddings contain much milk.

Skinmilk can be used in cooking and as a drink. It cannot take the place of whole milk entirely as it does not contain enough of the fat soluble growth substance. However the minerals and body building materials are the same as those in whole milk.

Buttermilk and sour milk can be used in baking with excellent results. Buttermilk is a delicious drink for the older child and the grown person. It is especially healthful. Cheese dishes furnish the adult with the body building protein of milk. Of course, these belong largely in the diet of the older child and the grown person. Milk is a safeguard in their diet and they can use many milk products. To the young child, however, milk is a necessity if he is to have proper health, strength and energy.

MILK AS A FOOD.

The increased cost of production has caused a serious decrease in the consumption of milk and other dairy products, says the Youth's Companion. The need to practice economy that nearly everyone felt during the last year has affected the purchase of milk and that in turn has compelled the dairymen to curtail the production of milk.

It would be better for the public health if people would economize more rigorously in almost any other way than in the use of dairy products. Until recently these products constituted fifteen to twenty per cent. of the food of the American people. Wherever the consumption of milk was large tuberculosis was held in check. With a noticeable decrease in the consumption of milk and butter the resistance to tuberculosis is weakened. In all institutions where tuberculosis is successfully treated the liberal, not to say lavish, use of milk as a food is the principal item in the treatment; it is even regarded as more important to the patient than fresh air and sunshine. Scientific observation shows that the milk consuming races are stronger physically and mentally and are longer lived than those in whose diet milk forms a relatively insignificant part.

But milk is good as a food only when it is produced under sanitary conditions. Producing milk under such conditions is in these days expensive. Effort on the part of the public to insist that the price of milk is out of proportion to the high prices that prevail for other commodities means either less milk or poorer milk. People should not discourage the milk producer.

CLEAN, COOL MILK.

From Hoard's Dairyman.

It is a simple matter to produce a high quality of milk when a person knows how. Only a few fundamental factors must be considered. The utensils, including strainer, milk pails and cans, must be kept clean. As soon as the milk is drawn it should be placed in clean cans in cold water. If ice water can be provided it is better than cold well water, which in the northern states has a temperature of 48 to 50 degrees. If care is taken to pump a sufficient quantity of well water and stir the milk several times shortly after it is placed in the tank, little or no difficulty will be found in the production of the highest quality of both milk and cream.

It is important, of course, that the cows be kept clean and well bedded stalls provided. It is highly desirable that the milker have clean hands and during the process of milking prevent foreign material of any kind from falling into the milk. But the two most important factors in the production of high class raw material are clean utensils and cooling the milk immediately after it is drawn to a temperature below 55 degrees F., and lower if there is a supply of ice.

The loss that comes to the dairy industry through sour milk and low quality of cream is tremendous in the aggregate. Every summer thousands of pounds of milk are thrown away because it has not been properly produced. It is sour before it reaches the creamery, cheese factory or condensery. Our attention was called only recently to this by the superintendent of a condensery who said that a number of times last summer whole loads of milk which came a considerable distance had to be destroyed as it was unfit to be made into condensed milk. This loss is distributed, the producers and the condensery sustain it. But such losses need not follow if the producer will but follow the two vital principles necessary to produce clean milk, namely: Clean milk utensils and quick cooling after the milk is produced. Bear in mind also that clean methods of handling milk are important.

MUCH COTTAGE CHEESE EATEN.

The United States Department of Agriculture and the food officials of many states carried on an active campaign to increase the use of cottage cheese last year with the result that a great deal of this food was eaten and much meat saved. Now the people have learned to like this dairy product and the consumers want to know more about the manufacture and use of cottage cheese. A number of states are carrying on this education campaign and when conditions warrant the home manufacture of cottage cheese and butter will be encouraged and efforts to increase the general use of the food will be made.

In a number of states educational work to teach the housewives the value of skimmilk products is being carried on in the cities. The places where the women demonstrators are endeavoring to create a demand are situated where there is usually a surplus of skimmilk. Dairy specialists will also help the milkmen in their efforts to manufacture cottage cheese of extra quality.

THE USES OF FOOD CONSTITUENTS.

From the Michigan Food and Drug Monthly.

Some foods supply warmth and energy. These are different kinds of force, one of which can be changed into the other. Many of these foods do not assist in repairing the waste of the body, because they do not contain the necessary elements of which the body is composed. It is therefore necessary for a proper understanding of the food question to know the composition of the body and the food necessary for it. The constituents of food are for these purposes divided into five classes: Fat, carbohydrates, protein, mineral matter and water.

Fat is found in animal products, such as meat, butter, cheese and milk; also in the oils of the olive and cottonseed and in various nuts. Grains like oats and corn also have considerable fat. These fats or oils furnish force to the body in the form of heat and energy. A given weight of fat produces more than twice as much energy as the same weight of sugar and starch foods.

If more fat is taken than the system demands, the surplus fat may be stored in the body as fat to serve as a source of heat and energy at some future time, if needed.

Fat does not produce muscular tissue, but by chemical process is virtually "burned" in the body to produce power.

Carbohydrates are substances which are so named because they consist of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. The most common carbohydrates are the sugars, such as milk sugar, cane sugar and grape sugar; starches, which are the principal part of wheat, corn and other cereals and also vegetables like the potato. Carbohydrates also furnish power and energy to the body like the fats but only about half as much. They may be changed in the body to fat and stored up for future use. Like fats, carbohydrates do not produce muscular tissue.

Protein is a name applied to a large class of substances containing nitrogen, such as lean meat, the white of eggs, the casein in milk, the gluten of flour and other cereals. Protein in foods is used by the body to repair and grow the muscular tissue. It is the most important of the food stuffs and generally the most expensive to buy. It can also be used for heat and power like the fats and carbohydrates but should not be as the former is not as expensive.

Mineral matter in food is the ash left after the food is burned. The mineral matter of the body consists of phosphates of lime, of which the bones are made and compounds of sodium, magnesium and potassium and iron which are found in the blood and the muscular tissue in small amounts.

Mineral matter occurs more or less in all foods in sufficient quantities for bodily needs so that but little need may be given it in formulating a balanced ration for human consumption.

Water—more than half the weight of the human body is water. It is absolutely essential to life as it helps perform the processes of digestion, distributes the food material to all parts of the body and maintains the body at a uniform temperature. It is a natural constituent of all food and being abundant in nature no attention is given it in formulating a ration.

These different classes of food materials occur combined in nearly all foods, but the relative amount of the different substances varies and occasionally in some foods one is entirely absent.

The average human body contains about 15 per cent. fat, 18 per cent. protein, carbohydrates 10 per cent., mineral matter 6 per cent. and water 60 per cent., and it has been estimated that a man at hard work requires $3\frac{1}{2}$ ounces of protein, $3\frac{1}{2}$ ounces of fat and $17\frac{1}{2}$ ounces carbohydrates to meet the demands of the system each day.

IMPORTANCE OF CLEANLINESS AROUND THE DAIRY.

The extreme importance of absolute cleanliness around the dairy is now generally recognized by all successful dairymen. Researches have made them fully conversant with the fact that the bacteria commonly found in milk are miniature plants, and like all plants, such as wheat, corn and grasses require three things for their growth, namely, soil, moisture and proper temperature.

Milk is an ideal medium for the development of all kinds of bacteria. Bacteria, like all other plants, require food and milk is a good food. Milk is well supplied with water and the casein or curd of milk forms a good soil, or food for bacteria to grow upon. And when milk is first drawn from the udder of the cow it is at a temperature best suited to the most rapid growth of bacteria.

Where do the bacteria come from? It should be borne in mind that the bacterial content of milk largely comes from some source external to the cow. It is a fact that some of the bacteria in milk comes from the cow directly, but with few exceptions these bacteria are harmless, having power to curdle or sour the milk only. The dangerous type of bacteria found in milk, almost invariably, reaches the milk through some outside agency.

Since the vast majority of bacteria found in milk reaches it through external sources, it is self-evident that the number of bacteria finding their way into milk may be more or less controlled by the dairyman. Thus, all reforms in the dairy world are designed to accomplish several ends, namely: First, to eliminate as far as possible, all diseased or unhealthy animals from the dairy herd. Second, to guard the milk from becoming contaminated after it leaves the cow's udder until it finally reaches the consumer. Third, to assist the dairyman to bring about conditions around the dairy that will tend to lessen the number of bacteria finding their way into the milk, and as far as possible to produce conditions that will prevent the growth and multiplication of the bacteria that may unavoidably get into the milk.

The demand for a purer milk, and for greater care in its production is growing steadily and this demand will be more and more strictly enforced.

To meet the demands for a purer milk, the dairyman is paying especial attention to the following requisites so closely related to the production of clean and wholesome milk.

1st. Health of the cow.—The dairy herd should be inspected periodically by a veterinarian to determine their soundness, and no animal suffering from a contagious disease, especially disease of the udder, should be allowed to contribute to the milk supply. It would be almost impossible to overrate the importance of excluding tuberculous cattle from herds contributing to the public milk supply, particularly where milk reaches the public in its raw, or unpasteurized state. The dairyman who would gain the confidence of the milk consumer will have his dairy herd inspected at intervals, and apply the tuberculin test to all his cattle, and any animal that reacts must be taken away from the rest of the herd.

The udders of the cows should be watched carefully, and when there are any signs of inflammation or disease, or where there is an appearance of gargetty or bloody milk, the animal's milk should be discarded until she has completely recovered. To insure healthy cattle they must be given a fair amount of outdoor exercise and allowed to breathe plenty of fresh air.

2nd. Stables.—The stables must be light, airy, dry, clean and comfortably warm. There should be at least three square feet of light for each animal in the stable. Light is nature's great disinfectant. Stables should be airy. Each cow should not have less than 600 cubic feet of air space and when the cattle are turned into the yard as they should be daily, except in extreme weather, the stables should be properly aired. It is important that dairy cattle spend a portion of the day outside, and the length of time so spent should be regulated by the temperature and condition of the weather. Cattle giving milk must not be exposed to cold rains or zero weather, but if the weather is clear and not too cold, they should be given ten or fifteen minutes outdoor exercise daily. Each dairy barn should be equipped with a good system of ventilation. The stables should be dry. Where the walls and ceiling of the stable are unduly damp the cause may frequently be traced to faulty ventilation.

Wherever possible dairy barns should be built upon high and dry ground and surroundings kept clean by removing the manure a good distance away. This may easily be done by using a litter carrier. The stables ought to be cleaned daily, at least, and not less than two hours should elapse between the cleaning of the stable and milking time. The interior of the stable should be smoothly finished. Floors should be made of cement, and should be made smooth except where the cows travel so as to make easy their sanitation and cleanliness. The ceilings and walls should be close and smooth, and should be whitewashed every six months. This can be easily done by a spray pump. Whitewash disinfects and makes the stable light and clean. Dust and cobwebs should receive special attention, for these form traps for the accumulation of dirt, and are also sources of bacteria that find their way into milk and contaminate it. Cattle should be supplied with plenty of clean bedding.

Dairy employees.—To insure clean and wholesome milk, it is necessary to pay considerable attention to the personnel and habits of the persons employed in the dairy. In the better class of dairies those who do the milking wear white linen coats and trousers. White is preferable to dark clothes since it shows the dirt when soiled. The clothes of the milkers should be made of washable material. It has been determined on careful investigation that bacteria from the hands and clothes of the persons milking the cows, and handling the milk, is often more dangerous than those from other sources. Hence, it is becoming common in the best class of dairies to insist upon a thorough washing and drying of the hands of the milkers before milking commences. No one should be permitted to handle any milk or to wash and handle the milking utensils in any way, who is suffering from any contagious disease. Also the use of tobacco should be strictly forbidden around the dairy.

Guarding the milk.—We have seen that most of the bacteria of ordinary milk comes, not from the udder of the cow, but from some external source hence the greatest caution should be practiced in the care and handling of the milk after it leaves the cow's udder. Milking out of doors is to be especially commended, and should be practiced where and whenever possible. Cows should not be fed hay or other dry fodder when being milked but rather immediately after. Feeding the cows with dry feed is sure to fill the air with dust and dirt, and experiment has shown that milk contains a larger number of bacteria where the cows are fed dry feeds during or immediately preceding milking. It is much better to feed after milking, as then the bacteria laden dust will have a chance to settle before the next milking time. This practice will result in a cleaner milk and a lower bacterial content.

Cleanliness of cow.—If a clean and pure milk is to be obtained it is absolutely necessary to give much attention to the cleaning and grooming of the dairy cattle. The more successful dairymen are giving much attention to the grooming of the cows, and in numerous instances, the cleanliness of the cows is given as much attention as that of the horse. This is absolutely necessary if a proper milk supply is to be obtained and maintained. Where cattle are confined to stables some manure is bound to adhere to the flanks and tail, and where the hair is particularly long and coarse the character of the milk is bound to suffer if much attention is not given to the cleanliness of the cow before milking time. The hair of the udder, flanks and tail of the cow should be clipped occasionally and she should be groomed at least once a day. Cows should not be allowed to wade through mud and manure. Many barnyards are filthy and unfit for cows to run in, simply because they are not properly drained and cleaned. The manure should never be allowed to accumulate in the barnyard but should be dumped into a spreader and drawn to the field and spread. This practice saves much time and labor and insures greater fertilizing efficiency. A clean, dry barnyard for the dairy cattle to exercise in will contribute much to the cleanliness and health of the cows and hence influence the purity of the milk.

Dairy utensils.—Perhaps more than any other source, dairy utensils affect the bacterial content of milk. It is self-evident, therefore, that dairy utensils should receive the greatest of consideration and care, yet how often we find milk pails, strainers, coolers, milk cans, cream separators, etc., that have never been properly cleaned and sterilized. To properly care for dairy utensils is no ordinary or easy task, and it is practically useless to attempt to clean milk pails, strainers, etc., with cold or even warm water. All milk vessels should be made of good metal with a perfectly smooth surface.

All milk utensils should be rinsed as soon as they are emptied with cold water. If milk is allowed to dry on them it makes it very hard to clean them afterward. If they are rinsed as soon as they are emptied, the cleaning is made much easier. After rinsing they should be cleaned by using warm water with a good washing soda and brush, not a cloth, then rinse with warmer water, after which use plenty of boiling water or preferably live steam for sterilization purposes. Where milk is being delivered to a large dairy or creamery the cans should be cleaned and sterilized before being returned to the farmers.

SALT INDISPENSABLE.

We may regard salt as indispensable to the vital requirements of the animal body, and hence that deficiency of it disturbs the balance, and throws the system out of order. No doubt different animals need salt in different quantities, says Prof. G. L. McKay, and animals of the same class are with equal certainty influenced in their individual requirements by their environments. A cow in full milk would naturally need more salt than other bovines of similar body weight, because a large proportion goes into and is found in the milk. In the ash analysis of cow's milk, sodium and chlorine bulk largely.

Finlay Dun, in dealing with the general action of salt says: "So essential is the regular and frequent use of salt for the maintenance of health, that animals, especially vegetable feeders, in a state of nature, instinctively travel many miles to saline springs, the seashore or incrustations or beds of salt." Dealing with salt as an essential for healthy nutrition, he quotes an experiment as to its dietetic value conducted by M. Boassingault who selected six cattle as equal as possible in weight and appearance, and fed them exactly in the same manner, except that three received each one-half ounce of salt daily, while the others received three ounces.

In about six months the skin and hair of those without salt became rough, dry and staring, presenting a striking contrast to the smooth shining coats of the others, which although a little heavier than their neighbors were more lively and of so much better appearance that they brought a somewhat higher price. The cattle receiving salt exhibited throughout greater appetite and greater relish for their food, consumed it in a shorter time and drank larger quantities of water.

CARE OF MILK IN THE HOME.

A writer in the Michigan Food and Drug Monthly contributes the following article on the "Care of the Milk in the Home."

If the producer and dealer have done their duty, there is left daily at the consumer's door a bottle of clean, cold, unadulterated milk. It will become unfit for food, especially for babies, if not properly cared for in the home. Care for your milk properly by observing the following rules.

1. Take bottles in at earliest possible moment after delivery.
2. Wash cap and outside of bottle thoroughly with clean, cold water.
3. Then place at once on ice.
4. Keep the ice box clean.
5. The ice box must contain no substance such as onions, fish or other substance which impart their flavor to milk.
6. Do not remove from ice box till you are ready to use it.
7. See that all receptacles for milk are clean.
8. Remove the cap from the bottle with a clean special lifter and replace the cap and put back on ice immediately.
9. When the milk has been used immediately wash the bottle and keep bottle empty and sanitary till delivered to dealer.

Most kinds of bacteria are harmless to human beings but some are just as fatal as the attacks of wild animals. If you are bitten by a mad dog you get hydrophobia and just as surely you get typhoid fever if attacked by typhoid bacteria. Every other kind of disease-producing bacteria produces another different disease.

The greatest dangers to health from the use of milk arise from the presence in or the introduction into milk of harmful bacteria, and from their increase in number. The greater their number the greater is the danger to human life.

Methods for avoiding these two dangers by care of milk in the home are indicated in the above rules, and how the observance of each rule helps in avoiding these dangers will be briefly indicated. A knowledge of the conditions under which bacteria multiply in number and of the conditions under which they do not multiply is essential to the intelligent observance of all of the above rules, and these conditions will be indicated first.

Bacteria grow on animal and vegetable matter. All particles of food on floors, walls, utensils, ice boxes or other places afford breeding places for bacteria and bacteria are so small that the particles of food on which they grow may be of such minute size as to escape detection by the naked eye. The dust and dirt in the home and on the street contain large quantities of this animal and vegetable refuse, on which bacteria feed. Thorough washing and cleansing of all parts of the home and of all utensils used for food is absolutely essential to the preservation of health.

Harmful bacteria may be in the food when it arrives in the home, if it is a portion of a diseased animal, has been handled by people having disease, has been in contact with flies or dust, or has been produced, stored or shipped under unsanitary conditions. Even the air, especially inside of buildings and in unsanitary surroundings, contains bacteria which may get in the food if it is exposed.

Milk is one of the substances in which bacteria dangerous to human life multiply most rapidly. In protecting it from contamination you will to a very large extent at the same time protect the other foods in your home from the dangerous bacteria. You cannot protect one without protecting the others. A home safe and sanitary for milk will be safe and sanitary for other foods.

WHY NOT BE ROUGH WITH BACILLI?

Ever since it was discovered that a very large number of diseases are caused by the presence and action of organic germs, says the Literary Digest, brilliant thinkers have arisen at intervals to suggest that all infectious maladies might be done away with if we could only find some way of killing the bacteria. Undoubted truth as this is, its value has been somewhat limited by the fact that most of the things that will kill bacteria will also kill the unfortunate humans on whom they prey. This being the fact, some workers have been inclined to say: "Leave the germs alone and see to it that you are immune to them" the defensive as opposed to the offensive style of warfare. Dr. H. W. Hill, Director of the Institute of Public Health at London, Ontario, sees no reason however why we should forever sit in the trenches. He would go over the top and attack the germ where it is most dangerous. He sees no good reason why virulent strains of bacteria should not be extirpated, and thinks that public health work should be directed to this end. Commenting on this opinion Good Health says:

"The essential part played by bacterial infection in epidemics of disease has only very recently been thoroughly understood and acted upon. The so-called 'environmental doctrines' that associated malaria with swamps, prevailing winds, night air, etc., and considered that tuberculosis was caused by darkness and damp has been slowly but successfully superseded. The work of the immunologists has been so energetic and effectual, within limits, that many people are actually looking forward to the glad day when disease will disappear because everyone has been immunized. That immunity is not inheritable is understood, but optimists and enthusiasts for the general raising of the racial standard of living and of health are unfortunately prone to labor under the delusion that the longed for immunity can be cultivated by the use of good food, proper exercise, outdoor life, etc., --ultimate without the need of recourse to vaccines, serums and other immunizing agents. This belief while most useful in so far as it stimulates people to seek better living conditions and health for themselves and others is not justified by the facts as we know them. For each disease a specific agent must be employed and the resulting immunity appears to be utterly independent of age, sex, color, feeding, habitat, fresh air, or previous condition of body or mind. General vitality, so far as resistance to infectious disease is concerned, seems to be an absolutely insignificant matter.

SOME FACTS AND IMPORTANT PAPERS WHICH WERE READ
TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE
ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN DAIRY, FOOD AND DRUG OFFICIALS.
COMMODORE HOTEL, NEW YORK CITY.

The twenty-third annual convention of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials, held at the Commodore Hotel, New York City, was one of the most interesting and stimulating meetings ever held by that body. This number of the Bulletin is devoted almost exclusively to the publication of some of the more important papers read at that meeting, as it is felt that they deserve a large circulation. They deal with topics of present day interest and deserve the careful consideration of every citizen who is interested in the progress of our country.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS.

By Benjamin L. Purcell.

To the members of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials and their Guests.

I have the honor to submit the following statement and recommendations for the consideration of the members of this Association:

There never has been a time in the history of Food and Drug Control, that has offered the opportunity for constructive work that the present crisis in our National affairs holds out to the Food and Drug Officials of the Federal, State and City Governments. The Food and Drug Official's intimate knowledge of food conditions, his information of the methods and the character of the manufacturer and distributor, his knowledge of the necessities and customs of the people and his sympathies with them, make him the logical medium through which efforts should be directed to secure relief from some of the intolerable conditions surrounding the consumer's food supply.

The average Food Official has obtained but little publicity for the work that has been accomplished by him, and as a consequence he has not been accorded the place in public affairs to which his work entitles him; nor has the dishonest manufacturer who has been found guilty of the grossest offenses against the Food Laws, been made to suffer the public condemnation he deserves, because of the lack of support of the laws and of their purposes by the public press.

The cooperation of the press should be secured by Food and Drug Officials, and the local papers be freely used to advise the public of fraudulent foods and drugs found on sale in the several communities.

The trade and some few consumers read our quarterly and annual reports containing the results of inspections and analyses of foods, but when these belated reports are distributed, the supply of the adulterated product is exhausted, and the public does not get the information that will enable it to avoid such foods at the time it is needed most.

The daily press is the medium through which the public can best be advised, and the publishers should, and I am sure will lend their aid when they come to a realization of the power that they possess, and when they understand that their cooperation is earnestly desired, and that their support and constructive criticism is cordially invited and is considered essential to help make the work of real benefit to the people.

The laws enacted to secure better foods and drugs and with the enforcement of which laws the Food and Drug Officials of this Country have been charged, have been responsible for the successful movements even more potential than the suppression of deception and fraud. Constructive assistance has been given by the Dairy and Food Commissioners to the dairy interest of the country; help has been carried by the Federal Bureaus, and some of the State Departments to manufacturing enterprises; methods of analyses of fertilizers, feeds and foods have been worked out in cooperation with the Official Agricultural Chemists of our agricultural colleges and experiment stations; a decided impetus was given to the development of the public health movement of the country through the action of the Dairy and Food Commissioners in their insistence on sanitary precautions and surroundings in the preparation and distribution of dairy and food products, and the inspiration for the enactment of laws against false advertising can readily be traced back to the requirement for truthful labelling and branding to be found in the Food Laws.

These combined forces are steadily at work bringing about the fulfillment of the nation-wide demands not only for an honest food supply, but for honesty and cleanliness in all our dealings with our fellowman.

The improvements which have been made in the conditions surrounding the manufacture, storage and distribution of our food products, with the exception of our meat supply, have been most marked, but it is only the person who can and will compare the former existing conditions with the present, who can fully realize the strides which have been made in the safety of our food supply.

I have excepted our meat supply from the statement of the improvement which has taken place in our general food supply for the reason that I consider the conditions surrounding our meat supply a standing disgrace to our civilization. The greatest protection the general public has today against the consumption of diseased, polluted and impure meats is the doubtful protection that high temperatures give to meats which are subjected to cooking in their preparation for consumption.

Some few of our cities have meat inspection ordinances of more or less efficiency, but by far the largest part of our meat supply goes to the consumer without a pretense of ante mortem and post mortem inspection. The public is at the mercy of the butcher and must accept whatever is offered. The conditions existing in the majority of the small local abattoirs, where constant inspection is not maintained, is revolting in the extreme, and would not be tolerated by the public if the actual facts could be gotten before them. These conditions can be changed for the better if the cities and towns will require all slaughtering to be done in central inspected houses. The change can be made without cost to the locality, or an increase in the price to the consumer of his meat, by fixing a reasonable inspection fee to be paid by the owner of the cattle offering them for slaughter.

The improvements have not been brought about solely because of the fear of the law, nor entirely because of a recognition of the expedencies by the manufacturers, but it is rather a combination of a better understanding between the Food Officials and the distributors of foods that has made the vastly improved conditions which exist today; coupled, I believe with a very general desire on the part of the distributors of foods to cooperate with the officials charged with the enforcement of the laws, and to give satisfaction to the consumer in his purchase.

I do not believe that the direct sale to the consumer by the Government of the surplus army stocks of foods, will relieve to any appreciable extent the present high cost of living.

I do think that if the Government's surplus stocks had been promptly distributed through the regular channels of trade, and maximum profits fixed by the Government at which these products could have been sold, that greater temporary benefit would have been derived by the people generally.

I am confident that the Government could have found, if it had sought, responsible merchants who would have gotten the Government's surplus stocks into the hands of the consumer at a price which would have effected savings to a greater number than the method of parcel post distribution.

The machinery now existing in the several State Departments and in the Federal Government could have been utilized to excellent advantage to supervise the distribution of these surplus stocks through regularly established stores, and this service could have been secured from each State Government without an added extra penny of cost to the National Government.

There exists at all times some abuses in nearly all lines of effort in which large bodies of men are engaged, but practically all of the efforts made in the past to completely cure the taking of unfair profits have been more or less ineffectual. Probably no more conspicuous example of this failure exists than the Cooperative Buying Associations, where the promoters start out with the purpose of cutting off the profit of the so-called middle-man.

The promoters of these Buying Associations seem to fail to realize that they often cut out a competent middle-man, and substitute an incompetent man to perform the work.

The local distributor or middle-man has been used as a storage house, banker and attorney, in the days that are gone. He may have received too great remuneration for the service rendered, but he is at least entitled to the same consideration which the Cooperative Buying Association offers to the stranger at a distance, that is, buying on a cash basis in quantities and taking their purchases from the car to the home.

Offer the local distributor these same terms, and at a fair percentage of profit on the larger purchases, and I am satisfied that the result will be much more satisfactory to the purchaser, for then, the local distributor can be held responsible for what he delivers, while the purchases made from a stranger at a distance must be paid for before they are seen and disputes settled by mail or in the courts.

Food Officials, before encouraging the establishment of Cooperative Buying Associations, should carefully investigate the necessities and conditions which exist in a given locality, and if the arrangements suggested above can be applied, then the local distributor should be encouraged to continue his offices for the convenience of the community, rather than to have the legitimate profits of his business so curtailed by local consumers buying at a distance in large quantities that he is obliged to give up his established enterprise.

The Law of Supply and Demand is not obsolete. Increased production brought about by a sane "Back to the Farm" movement, which should include the payment of farm labor of the hire to which it is entitled; economy in purchases and of distribution; and the reversion of our inflated currency to its normal basis will be far more helpful in reducing the high cost of living than Government ownership or operation, or an attempt by the Government to do more than to prevent hoarding and profiteering, and combinations to increase the price of necessities. The consumer must do his part by curtailing his demands for more than reasonable service and making his purchases of foods with greater regard to their nutritive value than he has done in the past.

Government ownership and the tendency to centralize authority in the National Government is contrary to the spirit of our institutions. The existing conditions surrounding our food supply, point to no necessity, and offer no excuse for the National Government assuming powers in times of peace that belong inherently to the several states.

At the Chicago Convention a resolution was adopted having for its purpose the establishment of closer working affiliation between the trades, through their regular National and State Organizations, and the Food and Drug Officials, to reconcile differences, for the promotion of uniformity in the Food and Drug Laws and regulations of the several states.

Notice of the adoption of this resolution was sent to all of the principal Trade Organizations of the Country, with the request for an expression of opinion, and suggestions.

There was an unanimous expression of approval of the purposes of the resolution and offers to cooperate from the Trade Organizations.

The idea is that when matters of dispute in connection with labels and other cases arise between the trade and a commissioner that cannot be settled by the parties at interest, and which is not directly covered by the Statute Law of a state, that the facts be submitted to one of three or four regional committees of the Association, to be appointed by the President, and after conference and hearing the committee will render its opinion, which is to serve as a guide in bringing both sides of the controversy together. If the findings of the committee are unsatisfactory, then either side may present the matter to this Association at its next meeting. All findings of the several committees should be reported to the Secretary of the Association and be included in the Secretary's annual report.

With a view of working out some plan for the development of the purpose of this resolution, a day has been set aside on the program of this Convention for the several trade organizations and manufacturers to present and discuss matters with the Food and Drug Officials which will help to bring about greater uniformity in our laws and rulings, and to establish a practical working basis which will be helpful in promoting a better understanding between the manufacturers and distributors, and the officials charged with the enforcement of regulatory Food and Drug Laws.

The Food and Drug Official who is satisfied to limit his activities to police supervision, is not performing all of the duties which his office should cover. While a constant police supervision must be kept over the manufacture and distribution of foods and drugs, for the proper protection of the consumer in whose interest the laws are primarily enacted, it is a fact that occasion for police food work has very largely lessened in the past few years, and that cases of misbranding and adulteration are very much less frequent today than they have been in the past.

Food Officials must realize that there is a field, in addition to police work, that is practically uncovered by the several State Food Departments today, and in which they can render a service equally as important as that which they perform when seeking cases of misbranding and adulteration.

The field referred to is the opportunity for Food and Drug Officials to carry some real constructive aid to the manufacturer and distributor of foods by helping to overcome the difficulties that are met in all factories and food distributing houses; by conferring with the owners with the idea of offering such suggestions as will tend to improve the manufactured product; to effect savings by the utilization of by-products, and to explain the necessity for, and economic value of sanitation in the manufacture, storage and distribution of food products.

A great many of the State Departments today are engaged in educational work in the promotion of the dairy industry of the several states, and there is no reason why similar educational work should not be carried to the manufacturing plants where foods are prepared.

The Food Official should give his active aid and assistance to all movements tending to lessen the cost of distribution of food products to consumers; he should give every assistance to the proper Governmental Departments by presenting information which will tend to prevent monopolies formed for the purpose of increasing the price of food products.

There are many other ways by which the progressive Food Official may do constructive work, if he will be on the alert to take advantage of the opportunities which may present themselves to increase his usefulness and perform a real service to all of the people.

The amendment to our constitution adopted at the last annual convention of the Association in Chicago, offers an opportunity to all state municipal and county officials having connection with Food and Drug control to become active members of this Organization, with the full privileges of membership that the State and Federal Representatives enjoy.

We have felt especially pleased and encouraged at the expressions of interest we have received from the municipal officials in the enlargement of the membership of this Association, and I desire personally and in behalf of the Association, to extend a cordial and earnest welcome to the new members present, and to express the hope that they will not wait to be asked, but that they will take a most active part in the discussion of all matters in which they are interested that come before the Convention.

It will be a pleasure to the old members of the Association to confer with you, get your view point, and give you their ideas.

The Country is to be congratulated that Congress has at last enacted a law requiring packers of wrapped meats, such as hams, bacon, etc., to be marked with the correct net weight of the food content of the package. The sale of paper and prepared, weighted canvas at meat prices, will soon be a custom of the past and the consumer will have the opportunity hereafter of knowing how much meat he secures in his wrapped purchase.

I am pleased to advise you that representatives of this Association gave material aid and their moral support to the advocates of the passage of this law to secure its enactment.

I recommend to your favorable consideration the adoption of suitable resolutions expressing the opposition of this Association to Government operation or ownership of the transportation lines of the Country, or of our telegraph and telephone systems.

That we approve Government control without ownership or operation, of the meat packing industry, because of the pernicious trade practices that the packers have developed and fostered.

That we oppose the use of chemical preservatives in foods, or of the use of foreign coloring matter where its use may cover inferiority, or be the means of perpetration of fraud or deception.

That we favor the compulsory pasteurization of all milk and cream intended for human consumption; and recommend, as an economic measure for herd owners, the voluntary subjection of dairy and breeding cattle to the tuberculin test.

That we favor a uniform standard for butter of 82.5 per cent. milk fat, and a moisture content not in excess of 16 per cent.

That we favor a closer affiliation with women's organizations engaged in social and civic betterment work, with a view of obtaining their influence, support and active cooperation in the work of food sanitation and the economy in the purchase of foods and in the suppression of hoarding and profiteering.

Woman has long been recognized as the guardian of the morals of the home. Her success in that sphere warrants her ambition to take her part in the social work of the communities, but her instinctive good judgment entitles her to a much more important place in our economic affairs than has been accorded to her in the past. If she is given an opportunity for initiative, I am satisfied that she will prove a most powerful factor in the promotion of the avowed purposes of this Association.

I desire to acknowledge with my grateful appreciation the support and cheerful assistance that the individual members of this Association have given to me as President in the work of the organization and the preparation of the program of this Convention, and while I desire to avoid comparisons, I cannot let the opportunity go by without making special mention of the splendid work done by our beloved, faithful and efficient Secretary John B. Newman. The success of the meeting, and much of the constructive work of the organization has been due to his indomitable energy and initiative, and his splendid efficiency in carrying to successful conclusions his own undertakings and those he has been called upon to help along.

The New York Committee on reception and entertainment has provided most liberally and comprehensively for the pleasure, comfort and edification of the Association and our guests. You will, I am sure, be more than pleased with the arrangements that our hosts have so generously made for our entertainment and enlightenment.

In the last analysis we are all striving for the success of a common cause, but success to be worthy and lasting must include in its object the well being of the larger number of people, it must be brought about through cooperation and service, with a realization of our individual responsibility for the good of the whole, and the purpose to keep constantly before us the determination to be an active and integral part of the forces striving to place America and American Ideals in the forefront of the world movement for the promotion of civic, social, economic development.

BENJAMIN L. PURCELL,
President.

FOOD INSPECTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

By Dr. Lucius P. Brown.

Speaking before the members of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials, Dr. Lucius P. Brown, Director of the Bureau of Food and Drugs of the Health Department of New York, declared that too little food or malnutrition has probably killed more people than adulterated food. Dr. Brown was referring to the high cost of living, and its relation to foodstuffs during a talk on "Food Inspection in the United States, Past, Present and Future."

Dr. Brown spoke briefly on food inspection since 1883, and referred to its growing importance from an economic and public health standpoint. He said that in early days the efforts of the officials were directed against the grosser form of deficiencies and sanitation. He spoke of the effect that these efforts had on public health and ethics, asserting that the passage of the Federal Food Act led to the passage of legislation along similar lines by States, and later this was linked up with the work of cities and various co-operative associations, all looking to a more efficient solution of the problems involved in food and drug inspection.

The next step, said the speaker, was the perfecting of this system, and he pointed to the differences between the work of the nation, States and cities, declaring that the plans of the cities followed greater detail, like inspection of milk and bakeries, which naturally meant that the work was more intensive.

Dr. Brown said that he hoped the work that has been inaugurated will be pushed vigorously, adding that the prospects for development were excellent, providing it was conducted along the proper lines. He said the field for food associations and organizations of laymen interested in food and drug inspection and development was a broad one and offered many possibilities.

One of the leading talks of the day was made by Dr. Carl S. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, who spoke informally on "Food Containers and Utensils."

Cassius L. Clay, the State Analyst of Louisiana, read a paper on "Sanitary Law and Its Effectiveness in Sanitation of Foods."

Ernest Kelly, Chief of Market Milk Investigations of the United States Department of Agriculture, read a paper on municipal milk control which is of unusual interest because of the milk investigation which is now being conducted by the city authorities.

STATE FOOD AND DRUG CONTROL.

 By E. F. Ladd, North Dakota.

No one needs in this day and age to argue for the necessity of state food and drug control work in any up-to-date progressive state. What we need now, it seems to me, is to more fully emphasize the need for closer relation and cooperation of the state regulatory officials on the one side with the federal control and on the other with the municipal control work of the state. The unifying of all the forces of every character which are attempting to safeguard the general public, either as against adulteration and misbranding on the one side and bad sanitary conditions on the other. The lack of education, it seems to me, on the part of the producer, distributor and consumer as how best to handle and preserve food products is one of the most important things we have to contend with. The farmer who produces milk, cream, butter, eggs, poultry and like products does not realize the obligations that rest upon him to produce a high grade product uncontaminated and preserved so as to be marketed in the freshest possible condition when it reaches the distributor and thus enters into the channels of trade. Eggs are not strictly fresh because they are not properly gathered and cared for; the cream has been produced under bad conditions, poorly kept and thus comes to market in poor shape to be utilized for manufacturing purposes. The merchant who handles the product in the country towns accepts as all of the same value rather than attempt grade the product and pay according to the real value. Eggs are far from fresh, often decidedly stale, unfit for human consumption and are accepted without candling; the cream is received in bad and rancid condition for making butter, hence must be regenerated, limed and otherwise chemically treated before it can be used to produce even an inferior quality of butter that will not keep and the creamery or process butter maker attempts to get all of the over run possible, load it or adulterate it with water, sometimes up to 18 or 20 per cent. The butter received from many farmers has not been produced in a way to furnish anything more than packing stock to be purified and reconstructed into process butter, and the local buyer or average grocery merchant in the country towns, for fear of offending and losing a customer takes the article knowing its lack of quality and so makes no effort to keep the same in good condition or to put it in cold storage but passes it on and all along the line there is bad business methods for the country seems to be money mad and penny foolish.

But, you say, what has this to do with food and drug control? I answer it has everything to do with the success of our work and points to the necessity for reform in our food control work or of closer union between the forces of the regulatory work and those of State Department of Agriculture of the Extension Department of the Agricultural College, of the Experiment Station of the several states, and above all, a closer relation with the agricultural colleges of the country and a stimulating of these forces, if you please, to a realization of their opportunity for service to all the people of the state in an educational campaign extending all the way along the line from the original producer to the ultimate consumer, an education that convinces the farmer, the dairyman, the poultry producer, the creameryman and the handlers of these products that they must furnish better products as raw material and that the same must be marketed while still fresh and wholesome. The manufacturer or dealer must realize that he must care for his products after they come into his hands, getting them into cold storage at the earliest possible moment and that the buying of uncandled eggs means a prosecution when continued and unnecessarily burdens the transportation and forces an increased price to pay them for the waste and for the losses that have come from the handling of worthless products. They must learn that the state control officials are on their job or that when the products leave the state they are certain to be seized by the federal authorities and so on down the line. This means then working as one harmonious whole between the municipal authorities, the state officials and the federal authorities. It means then that products in cold storage must be more closely watched and abuses be prevented which have for their purpose profiteering or forcing the market. The public are looking for help and will not tolerate abuses that can be controlled, and they are demanding that their regulatory or inspection departments and their educational forces shall be more closely coordinated. Too many products, articles of food, as well as other commodities, are not manufactured so as to produce the highest grade possible but to make a profit. Creamerymen, ice cream manufacturers, millers of flour, makers of boots and shoes, of furniture, etc., are not making, in my humble opinion in the majority of cases, as good a product as they know how to make but just as good as the public will accept, and at times taking all the traffic will bear. I am aware I am treading on what some may class as dangerous ground, but I repeat again that creameries in general are not making as good a butter as they know how to make when they put in from 15 to 22 per cent of water or just as near the danger mark as they dare to go, to say nothing of other processes employed at times in utilization of unsound materials. The millers are not making as good a product, flour for example, as they know how to produce but a standardized product that the general public will accept and not complain of. Perhaps it is well, but such conditions and tendencies lead in the end to abuses such as an acquaintance of mine reported, a young chemist for a time employed in a so-called creamery for regenerating dairy products and furnishing butter for the public at a fancy price, when he was told that if he produced butter with less than 15.8 per cent of moisture he would lose his job, and if he got caught with butter containing too much water he must pay the fine. A fine standard in fancy butter-making for a young man to live up to. I would not insinuate that creamery men in general are all of this class. Far from it, but such men set the pace for all the rest and unless held in check, force all others to a like condition and such calls for courage and patience on the part of the food control officials in protecting the best interests of all parties.

I say, therefore, that we must go beyond the original conception of the police duties to ferret out and punish crime, food adulteration, short weights, etc. We must be prepared to point the way to organize all the forces that shall make for better and higher grade products. We must, with the cooperation of the extension forces, put on an educational campaign and through demonstration lead to sending to market satisfactory eggs that are strictly fresh and the buyer of these eggs must get these promptly into cold storage either publicly owned or controlled so that when shipped out and put on the market the consumer will feel certain that he is getting a high grade product and not one that is only 25 to 50 per cent usable. The state control must see to it that the products of all classes to be sold wholly within the state are pure and wholesome and that they have been produced and handled under proper sanitary conditions to furnish a safe and wholesome article of food, not for example, a milk contaminated with sewerage bacteria even though the milk may be otherwise of standard grade, that the meat at local butchers is free from the animal diseases like tuberculosis and that the handlers of food products have freedom from contagious diseases, and this through cooperation with the local health officers, and all of the regulatory work of the state should be coordinated and brought under one organization that shall deal with the bigger problems that have been forced upon our attention as the outcome of the war and of the period of reconstruction now upon us.

What I mean by unifying the regulatory work is well illustrated in North Dakota where the major part of all control and regulatory work is now assigned to the Agricultural College to be developed and strengthened for the benefit of the public, and it includes the following:

1. Agricultural Laws:

- a. Feeding Stuff Law.
- b. Formaldehyde Law.
- c. Insecticide Law.
- d. Fertilizer Law.
- e. Seed Inspection Law.
- f. Nursery Stock Inspection Law.
- g. Stallion Registration Law.
- h. Marketing Studies.
- i. Milling Investigations with cereals.

2. General Laws.

- a. Food Law.
- b. Drug Law.
- c. Patent Medicine Law.
- d. Beverage Law.
- e. Sanitary Inspection Law.
- f. Cold Storage Law.
- g. False and Misleading Advertising Law.
- h. Snuff Law.
- i. Diseased Meat Law.

3. Special Laws:

- a. Hotel Inspection Law.
- b. Oil Inspection Law.
- c. Official Weights and Measures.
- d. Inspection of Weights and Measures.
- e. Licensing of grain buyres and establishing grades for grain, also other agricultural commodities.
- f. Licensing of all warehouses and elevator accounting.
- g. Serum product for hog cholera and other animal diseases.
- h. Extermination of rodents, and predatory animals.

The foregoing work is being conducted from the Agricultural College and when properly coordinated with the other forces of the state, will become a power for good, not wholly in police control work alone, but in serving as a clearing house where all can look for advice and assistance in making a better condition for all our people. While in many states these forces may not all be located at one point, nevertheless, they can all be coordinated and working together as one unit towards a common end, and this has not always been the case in the past in that in most states each group of us has been working independently of all others. A large per cent of our people take meals, for example, at public eating places, and of what real benefit would it be to this great body of citizens if there was food control in our stores if the pure product is to be tampered with in the hotels and restaurant kitchens or was to be handled under unsanitary conditions; the milk skimmed or watered, the meat no longer fresh and chemically preserved, saccharin used in pastry and confections, and the scores of other things such as shipping in fresh products prohibited from being resold in the state, hence we see readily the necessity of hotel and restaurant inspection, including the sanitary inspection as being an essential part of the work of the food department. As already indicated I would emphasize the necessity for closer relation between the state officials and the municipal inspection departments even though at times the problem becomes decidedly distasteful and discouraging because of municipal political appointment or because of pressure brought to bear by powerful local influence to prevent the interfering with the assumed vested rights of the city boss or business magnate of a favored few which is fast crumbling before an educated and enlightened constituency.

Along some lines we have made wonderful progress in protecting and safeguarding the public, as for example, in assuring a pure and wholesome milk supply for the home and this is all important for the health of the people as the chief food of infants and children, but not so much has been accomplished in insuring a pure and wholesome supply in all classes at public eating places. Again, we have in most states accomplished comparatively little in protecting the public as to the quality of the drugs and medicines and even less against the frauds and abuses from the sale of proprietary medicines and nostrums, and the abuses from the quacks who prey upon the ills and frailties of mankind.

Closely wrapped up with these abuses come the many false claims being made through uncontrolled advertising and here we need to lend our influence toward securing a higher standard, the weeding out of 25% of all patents, putting a stop to the manufacture and sale of quack nostrums that are worse than worthless in that they furnish no real relief and the unfortunate victim loses a possible opportunity to have proper treatment if there is real need for it until it is forever too late. If we are to consider ourselves as representatives for protecting the public as our names indicate in Food and Drug Control then we should at once take steps to have strengthened the drug laws regulating the sale of patent medicines, put a stop to itinerant quacks, license all salesmen for patent medicines and secure an effective advertising law which would force out the glaring, false statements and claims now confronting the public in practically every daily paper and worse than all else in the local country press. I believe this association could render no better service than in one of its resolutions to go on record as to the necessity for the correction of these evils and that we should lend our influence in the securing of better protection both with regard to regulating the character of all forms of advertising and in controlling of the sale of quack nostrums.

DUTIES OF A STATE BUREAU OF MARKETS

By GUY C. SMITH, Director, Pennsylvania Bureau of Markets.

State Bureaus of Markets are in the experimental stage.

Marketing officials are confronted not only by the question "Where are we going?" but also by the question "What is the best road to take?"

The Organization which I have the honor of addressing today is made up of the representatives of certain State Bureaus or Commissions whose lines of work have become quite clearly defined. Years of experience have designated the type of legislation needed to give a proper basis for the work of dairy, food or drug officials. Not so with marketing. The last five years have seen the birth of nearly all State Bureaus of Markets. Not only is adequate experience lacking as a guide, but the problems are of such a delicate and complicated character as to make the work of these Bureaus extremely difficult. Marketing problems involve the interests of producers, buyers, shippers, commissionmen, wholesalers, jobbers, brokers, retailers, public markets, vendors, storage companies, transportation companies, bankers and finally that great body of people whom we refer to as consumers.

As in all other lines of business, time and experience have brought about certain methods and practices in the business of distributing the world's food supply. Though we may question the wisdom of certain of these practices, we must always bear in mind that there is generally a reason for the use of such methods as exist. The idea of vested interest is to some extent exploded. Undoubtedly changes are needed in our methods, but these changes should be in the nature of an evolution rather than a revolution. Such archaic parts of our machinery of distribution as exist, are so intimately related to the more efficient parts, that to attempt to get rid of the former by the use of dynamite, leaves us in great danger of wrecking the latter. The machinery which we are attempting to tinker is very delicate, and, because of this fact, the guiding principle of the marketing mechanic must be conservatism.

These general statements apply to marketing work at all times but they have particular application to the present time when many extravagant accusations and demands are being made regarding the subject of the distribution of food products.

And we have not stopped with accusations and demands, but in some cases, have resorted to actions, which not only have not accomplished what they were intended to accomplish, but in some instances have brought about exactly opposite results. Some of our cities have attempted to regulate profiteering which they believed to exist, by such drastic measures that they have discouraged producers and distributors to such an extent that less produce has flowed into their markets than otherwise would have been the case. The seizure of foodstuffs from storage warehouses may temporarily depress the market, but we must take care that by such measures we do not bring about higher prices next winter when this food would normally be placed upon the market. On the other hand, we must leave no stone unturned to detect and punish those persons or interests which are engaged in practices in our markets which unduly inflate prices. Such persons are operating not only against the interests of the public in general, but they are menacing the interests of all honest distributors. This involves the regulatory functions which a Bureau of Markets should be given.

The duties of any State Bureau of Markets obviously depend upon the law which establishes it. At the present time there are some twenty odd states which have established Bureaus of Markets by legislative enactment. There is quite a variation in their provisions and I shall not attempt to go into their details.

There are a few specific duties laid down by some of them that definitely provide that the Bureau of Markets shall assist in the formation of farmers' cooperative associations; promulgate rules establishing standard containers in which produce may be sold; establish grades for the products themselves; and license commission men or other factors in the trade. These, with possibly one or two other minor provisions are the only ones at all definite in character. The most of these laws contain many such general provisions as the following:

"The State Bureau of Markets shall have power to investigate the subject of marketing farm products and to furnish advice and assistance to the public with reference thereto."

"To gather and diffuse timely information concerning marketing conditions."

"To secure the cooperation and assistance of all other agencies."

"To investigate delays, embargoes and other practices which seem to be detrimental to a free, economical and efficient marketing of such products."

"To take such lawful steps as may be deemed advisable to prevent waste of perishable products."

Such statements as these apparently give a very wide latitude to the Bureau under which they are established.

The methods to be employed in carrying out such purposes must be determined very largely by persons in charge of the work and there is little to guide one in that effort. These general clauses which constitute the principal part of the legislation establishing our Bureaus, give evidence of the fact that the field is not as yet well defined. I shall attempt to state briefly a few of the principles which it seems to me should guide us in this work in the light of certain danger points that have already arisen or may possibly arise in the future.

1. We must have more actual facts upon which to base our marketing work. This means investigation.

2. We must draw a distinct line between commercial transactions and advisory, informational and regulatory work. I do not believe that it is feasible for any Bureau to engage in the buying or selling of products or to perform other functions which come dangerously close to that line.

3. Price regulation, in normal times at least, is undesirable. Supply and demand will control prices more fairly and effectively than any other agency.

4. There should be a close correlation between the work of any State Bureau of Markets and that of the United States Bureau of Markets.

5. There should be similar correlation with neighboring State Bureaus of Markets, because,

6. It is almost needless to say that such Bureaus must work hand in hand with State Bureaus of Foods, Bureaus of Weights and Measures and other State Offices which are dealing with problems closely related to marketing work.

7. State Bureaus of Markets should be given the power to deal vigorously with dishonest or vicious practices wherever they are proved to exist, but this grant of power should not be taken as a license to interfere with and disturb the channels of distribution at the mere caprice of the official in power. Regulatory legislation must evidently develop out of experience obtained by careful and thorough methods.

The field of work for a State Bureau of Markets is large, indeed, and its possibilities and responsibilities are correspondingly great.

CHANNELS OF DISTRIBUTION.

By PHILIP STAIB, Representing the National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

Members of the Dairy, Food and Drug Association:

It is a very great pleasure for me to be here and I appreciate the privilege of addressing you. More and more as the years go by I realize our mutuality of interest and the common purpose which actuates us; and this year above all others I am glad to address you.

The past twelve months have been crowded with poignant happenings and now, with Congress thirsting for Utopia, I look forward to a revolution of economic theories and practices; but, I hope, that, in its fight against autocracy, plutocracy, and the ten thousand other "ocracies" and "isms," Congress will not lose sight of the value of the wholesale grocer, whom I represent, and of the centralized State food authorities which you represent.

There must be channels of distribution. Food cannot pass immediately from the field to the consumer and the Wholesale Grocer of today is the logical outgrowth of years. He works for the manufacturer as well as for the retailer—He brings countless items with numerous grades, sizes, flavors and colors so that the demand of the human family can be met with all of its whims and ideas—peculiar and otherwise.

I need not here try to justify the Wholesale Grocer as an economic factor in the distribution of foods—for economic laws are quite as immutable as natural laws. We cannot compel distribution through us, rather we are recognized as economic. Therefore, we feel we perform a service in helpfulness as well as at low cost.

You have an important part in this economy, also, for in place of wide variations of ideas as to standard, you name a uniform standard based upon practical and workable lines for the protection of the ultimate consumer, and urge these standards to become a law.

I have cause to rejoice particularly today. Not only in the world being made safe for Democracy; but, what is more important, the netweight laws have been made safe for wrapped hams and bacon. My friends, I never see the picture of the smiling epicure sitting before a steaming plate of well-known bacon broiled to a nicety; I never see the sleek exponent of a darker age cutting juicy slices from a faintly pink ham nor any other gentle reminder of the succulent porker that I am not reminded of the glorious battle we fought to make this dear old earth a happy abode for wrapped hams and bacon.

You gave the finest kind of assistance of which you were capable; you have always given us the benefit of your moral support in our fight, in the common interest, to have wrapped hams and bacon stamped with the net and not the gross weight. Paper, card and canvas should never have been sold as meat, and all red-blooded Americans resent the interference that they did not know the difference. Consumers have always shown a willingness to pay for service and when the Wrapped Ham and Bacon practice is reviewed again, truly human intelligence has for years been insulted.

We always have been and we still are strongly of the opinion that the consumer's interest is best served in selling the article for what it is and we have never overlooked any opportunity to have this kind of legislation enacted.

During the present session of Congress a Bill was introduced known as the Agriculture Appropriation Bill, which contained an interpretation of the United States Food and Drug Act, providing that such articles as wrapped meats be stamped with the net weight. We assiduously supported this Bill and conducted an intensive campaign to have it enacted into law. However, the President vetoed it because of the inclusion therein of a clause to abolish the present daylight-saving plan. A substitute Bill was introduced with the net weight branding amendment included but with the day-light saving clause excluded and this Bill the President signed. So that Hams and Bacon in package form will now be stamped with Net Weight and it will logically follow that they be sold Net Weight.

It only remains for me, as representative of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, to thank you in proportion to the large effort you put forth in behalf of the consuming Public. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association wants to protect honest merchants against the expensive and hurtful competition of those who practice unfair methods or sell adulterated or misbranded food and we have accordingly advocated food laws in every State along the lines of the National Statute. You and we, among other, have always worked for equality of legislation and common justice, and I ask your future co-operation as I pledge our fealty, our friendship and our good wishes.

The world will be made safe for Democracy and for Hams and Bacon and we hope, for honest manufacture and labelling. The Public must know that they are protected in the wholesomeness of the foods they buy and in the honesty of the labels which represent them. It should not for a moment be permitted to foist an inferior grade of goods upon the Public under cover of a deceiving label. The food laws of the various States and of the United States must be rigidly upheld, and purveyors of foods must establish a reputation for absolute honesty in their representations.

The world needs food, it is true. But more than that, it needs good food that will sustain life and promote health and vigor. It requires that food be dispensed behind truth-telling labels. The time has passed when the masses will accept uncomplainingly and unthinkingly anything which is offered to them. The world has suffered too much, endured too much, and sacrificed too much. And out of all that misery has been born an indomitable will and purpose to know the reason for things as they are and the condition of things as they are. The world is more largely responsive and sensitive; it is quicker to see, more insistent in its demands, quicker in its judgments, and less inclined to endure injustice. It wants fairness, and, so far as you and we are concerned, it is going to get it.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association is awake and alive to many things which must and shall be corrected. Not only does it know but it acts, decisively, fearlessly, and for the common good. It does not lack the courage of its convictions, and it endeavors to see justice done and good accomplished in its field. We shall need your assistance in the future, and we feel confident of success in those of our endeavors which are supported and aided by you.

While the legislatures of the various States were in session many Laws were enacted which were valuable additions to other statutes of their respective States.

So long as there are foods in packages so long will your Association and mine be of value. I do not know what will become of our descendants when they usher in synthetic foods. They now have synthetic oils and synthetic alcohol. So I confidently expect that some day we will eat synthetic foods served on synthetic plates and paid for by synthetic money. That era will be co-incident with the era when Congress is not blamed for all the ills the world is heir to, when the Wholesale Grocer is not blamed for the rise in prices, when I am not invited to address Conventions, and when lesser lights than Presidents will split infinitives with impunity. In other words, synthetic foods will antedate by about one week the long-heralded but little-wished-for Millennium.

There are innumerable other subjects of pressing moment—labor, prohibition, railroads, shipping and hundreds of others, large and small. I confidently feel that time will bring adjustment. We must have patience. The whole world was disrupted and re-adjustment cannot come over-night. But it will come and I hope within not many years, so that you and I will live to see it and live to know that our children and their children will not witness again a conflict such as we have seen, but will go their untrammelled way in goodness and in joy, singing the glad note of freedom and personal liberty.

BEVERAGES, INTOXICATING AND NON-INTOXICATING.

By WILLIAM FREAR.

Mr. President and Members of the Association:—

Permit me to preface what I shall say upon this subject by the statement that the topic was chosen by the program committee and assigned to me to discuss; also that I was informed that the title was intended to develop a suggestion of the alcoholic concentration at which an alcohol-containing beverage should be regarded as intoxicating, as distinguished from other alcohol-containing beverages of lower alcohol concentration which might, in contrast, be regarded as non-intoxicating.

There are many points of view from which this important and just now especially agitated question may be studied. I have presumed that I was expected to approach the question from the view-point of science, or, more specifically, from that of the physiological chemist, and to base upon existing scientific evidence any suggestion I might venture to make.

I have, furthermore, assumed that the reason for placing the subject upon the program is the existence now, or the probable later development of official responsibilities devolving upon the members of this Association.

The considerations just set forth have caused me to weigh with much care the present trend of various events and influences that may determine the decision upon this question. It is clear to every thoughtful citizen that the question is not now in an academic phase, but is of highly practical nature. Public discussion has reached a highly emotional state, and that state is not compatible with a narrowing of the question to a simple phase, which science might attempt to settle, nor is the present public mood patiently receptive of any solution based solely upon the evidence that science has to offer. The problem is moral, economic, and broadly sociological, rather than very narrowly physiological.

In keeping with and because of this condition, the determination of the question for the United States will lie with Congress, and with the Courts as interpreters of national legislation. I say 'with Congress,' because with the approval, by the prescribed constitutional method, of the prohibition amendment, the national government is for the first time clothed with a specific police duty and power; and, pending interpretation by the Federal Supreme Court, no one can say with certainty what limitation, if any, is placed upon the exercise of that power by that phrase in the amendment which refers to 'concurrent' action by the States.

I am aware that members of this Association have, in some of the States, been asked as State officers to give counsel to their respective legislatures which attempted an independent and possibly tentative solution of the problem under the urging of their constituencies. I have no knowledge that, in relation to Federal legislation, such responsibility will be placed upon any of us.

The considerations I have just mentioned have determined both the nature and the form of what I shall present to you at this time and in this relation, respecting the principal issue intended to be raised by the subject assigned. There is a collateral matter in which we shall have large executive responsibilities. To that I shall briefly refer in a later part of this paper.

I regret that you have not asked one whose qualification is, more strictly than my own, that of the physiological chemist. I will, however, endeavor to present as briefly and clearly as I can, some of the salient facts accepted by most physiological chemists concerning the entry, condition, disposed and more immediate effects of alcohol, that is, grain alcohol or ethyl alcohol, upon the normal, adult human body:

- (1) Alcohol passes unchanged from the stomach and intestines into the blood.
- (2) It is not known to form in the blood or in the organs fed by the blood, any more complex substance of which it constitutes a definite part; that is, it remains alcohol and exerts the effects of alcohol until it is destroyed.
- (3) The normal body has the ability continuously to oxidize alcohol introduced into the blood. In a general way, this ability is constant.
- (4) The products of this oxidation are carbonic acid, water and heat; just what we get when we burn alcohol outside the body, and what we get when sugar is completely burned in the body.
- (5) The heat evolved when alcohol is oxidized in the blood has value to the body, but this of itself does not justify the conclusion that alcohol is a good food. Other effects of alcohol in the blood may more than offset the benefit obtainable from the heat it liberates when oxidized.

- (6) Any alcohol at any time present as such in the blood tends to produce an abnormal nervous state; the action is narcotic rather than stimulant.
- (7) The degree of these nervous effects in normal individuals is, at least approximately, proportional to the concentration of alcohol in the blood.
- (8) In such individuals, the degree of alcoholic concentration in the blood is the net result of the rate of entry of the alcohol from the digestive tract, on the one hand, and of the rate of alcohol oxidation and possibly, in extreme cases, of direct elimination, on the other. That is, alcohol can accumulate in the blood only upon the condition that it is introduced more rapidly than it is destroyed; also, the highest alcohol concentration reached in the blood after a single potation, is quickly followed by a decreasing concentration, due to the oxidation of the alcohol. How rapidly the nerve disturbance decreases with the lowering of alcohol concentration in the blood, that is, what the lag of the nerve effect may be, I do not know.
- (9) Since the normal contains either extremely little alcohol or none at all, it follows that alcohol introduced into the digestive tract in very great dilution, that is, very low concentration, can enter the blood despite the low concentration.
- (10) It is generally held that the rate of entry depends quite directly upon the degree of concentration of the alcoholic solution in the digestive tract; but the absolute amount entering depends, of course, upon the absolute amount of alcohol the digestive tract contains.
- (11) The state of alcoholic concentration in the digestive tract depends, also, not wholly upon the percentage of alcohol in the beverage taken, but also upon the diluting effect of other stomach and intestinal contents. This means that a greater dilution of an alcoholic liquor results when is taken with a meal, than when it is consumed by itself upon an empty stomach.

It may be of interest to note here that fats act as selective absorbers and holders of alcohol. A pat of butter taken with a cocktail delays its nervous effect, probably by slowing down the rate of entry of the alcohol into the blood, and the fatty tissues of a fat man probably serve in like manner to side-track some of the alcohol from the blood. This retards the accumulation in the blood and also the rate of decrease after the highest point of concentration in the blood itself has been reached. For with decrease of alcoholic concentration in the blood, the alcohol apparently leaves the fatty tissues and returns to the circulatory fluid.

These facts point out the road by which physiological chemists approach such questions as that you have raised.

Allow me here to note that your question assumes that the alcoholic concentration alone of a beverage determines its intoxicant quality. This is not strictly correct. The quantity also in which it can ordinarily be consumed is a factor of importance; and this quantity is determined not solely by the ordinary three-pint capacity of the human stomach, but also by the presence or absence of other, cloying constituents that might much diminish the receptiveness of the stomach for large volumes of the beverage.

But the main thing the physiological chemist would say is this: "I do not know precisely what you mean by 'intoxicating'; my answer must depend closely upon what you mean by this word.

With respect to the normal adult, do you mean to apply the word 'intoxication' to the more extreme nerve effect we commonly call 'drunkenness'? Or do you include also that less pronounced effect we call 'tipsiness'? Or do you go even further and include the less readily evident effects upon quickness and accuracy of motion, upon quickness and accuracy of choice, upon clearness of memory, breadth of association of ideas, and other nerve conditions that are determinable accurately only by the use of laboratory methods?

Moreover, you may have in mind not only the normal individual, but all individuals, of whom some are almost incredibly affected by small quantities of alcohol. While I have seen hundreds, possibly thousands of men drink one or two glasses of beer within a short time without developing the least evidence of tipsiness, I have observed one athletic adult, unaccustomed to alcoholic drinks, develop flushed cheeks within one minute after swallowing less than a tablespoonful of ordinary 3.5 to 4% beer, become silly within three minutes, and stagger in less than five minutes. This is doubtless a relatively rare case. There are other individuals as pronouncedly insensitive to the effects of large doses of high concentration.

You will perceive at once, now that the physiological chemist has asked what you mean by 'intoxicant', my reason for saying that your question is not determinable by purely scientific or physiological methods. In effect, he says, "I have the yardstick. What cloths shall I measure for you and how many yards of it will you have?"

I will say very frankly that I believe that any attempt on my part to express what you would regard as the best judgment concerning the meaning of the word 'intoxicating' would be futile. Men and women of high purpose differ gravely upon this point, and from a great variety of considerations. If I have disappointed you by my reserve, let me indulge the hope that this discussion may nevertheless have helped some of you to a little more definite thinking upon a few of the details of this great problem.

With your indulgence let me note in passing what interpretation the Courts have hitherto placed upon the words 'intoxication' and 'intoxicating liquor'. You all understand, of course, that one of the guiding rules for the legal interpretation of statutes is that, unless the context otherwise indicates, words used in laws have, in that connection, their common, every-day meaning; that is, these words as they appear in a law mean there just what they mean as they are used by 'the man on the street.' In preparing the application to the Federal Court for an injunction against the Collector of Internal Revenue for this District in the 2.75% beer case, I am told that Mr. Elihu Root compiled from thirty-five judicial decisions in which the words were defined or their meaning discussed, the following definitions:

"Intoxicating liquors are those liquors which are intended for use as a beverage, and which contain alcohol in such proportion or per cent that when consumed in any quantity that can practically be drunk by an ordinary man, or in any quantity that the human stomach can ordinarily hold, will produce a condition commonly known as intoxication or drunkenness."

"Drunkenness or intoxication is a materially abnormal mental or physical condition, manifesting itself in the loss of the ordinary control of the mental faculties or bodily functions to a substantial extent."

With regard to non-intoxicant beverages, the so-called 'soft drinks', your duties of inspection and control are already imposed and of high importance. After the concentration of alcohol is fixed below which a beverage is legally adjudged to be non-intoxicating, you will have to see that this limit is not exceeded; but the much more difficult duty also will lie with you to see that injurious substitutes for alcoholic drinks shall not be made and sold to the detriment of the thirsty public. Against the possible excessive use of pungents, of injurious bitters, and of substances such as caffeine, and the introduction of 'kick'-producing substances that may be even more injurious than alcohol, you must guard. The details of these matters, so far as they are known, I can not now discuss without passing beyond the limit of time which I may use.

MUNICIPAL FOOD AND DRUG CONTROL. ITS FUNCTION AND SCOPE.

By Fred C. Blanck, Ph. D., Food and Drug Commissioner, Maryland.

The nature and extent of municipal food control is a question which probably causes divergent replies. At the outset, it is assumed that municipal food control is exercised by the local department of health as so far no other purely local agency has undertaken this function. Some health officers are inclined to look with disfavor on food control except in so far as the transmission of disease is concerned. Others take a broader view and include the economic aspect as well as the health side of the question. In order to bring out a full consideration of the problem, an effort has been made to assemble such views as have found expression in our recent literature.

Just as our earliest organized health activities were undertaken by municipalities, so our primary food control work was originally undertaken by local authorities. These efforts were directed against the sale of unsound and unwholesome meats, vegetables and fruits, but no special provisions were made regarding the sale of adulterated or misbranded foods. As local food control developed, increasing consideration was given to the sanitation and conditions under which food products were sold. In fact the trend of recent municipal good legislation (1) is clearly in the direction of sanitation and protection from contamination. Only rarely does one find a local ordinance considering specifically the adulteration of foods or making any effort to establish standards of purity with the exception of milk ordinances.

This failure to consider economic aspects is probably due to the health officer's training and his greater interest in problems of a purely public health nature. That this attitude exists is clearly evidenced by some of the recent publications. Chapin, (2) in a paper on "The Relative Value of Public Health Procedures" gives food adulteration a value of 0, food sanitation a value of 10, milk adulteration a value of 3, and milk sanitation a value of 17, out of a total of 1000 for all health activities. He says further "According to popular notion, the principal functions of a city department of health are sanitation and food control. Another time honored and popular means of promoting the public health is control of the food supply. This control naturally is divided into the prevention of adulteration and the promotion of cleanliness. Though there is much lurid literature on the dangers of impure food, as a general thing adulterants are as likely to be healthful as unhealthful. Adulteration, with rare exception, is an economic and not a health problem. That food is not rarely infected with human secreta and excreta by those who handle it, and thus becomes a real factor of importance in the transmission of disease is certain. It is worth while to try to check this. The elimination of infected food handlers also gives some promise, but its true value is yet to be determined." In an earlier article (3) on "How shall we spend the Health Appropriation," the same author says "Milk supervision from the chemical standpoint is necessary to protect the pocket of the father as well as the nutrition of the child. It is worth all it costs. The inspection of foods has little relation to the public health though it is a subject which yields many startling news items and lurid editorials."

Schneider, in a paper (4) on "Relative values in Public Health Work," gives milk control a value of 2.7 and food sanitation a value of 0.1 out of a total of 100.

MacNutt, (5) in his "Manual for Health Officers" considers regulation of food supplies under the following classes of conditions:

1. Infection. 2. Contamination with dirt and other foreign material. 3. Decomposition. 4. Adulteration, preservatives, etc.

He says, "On the whole, the main public health aspects of food supplies other than milk relate to those foods which may be infected and convey infection through being consumed in the raw state. Otherwise (leaving out of our present scope dietetic and nutritional problems) the matters here considered raise comparatively few responsibilities for the local health officer."

Moehler, in a paper (6) on "Food Inspection and Food in Relation to Public Health," says "In food inspection work a distinction should always be clearly made between food control as a means of insuring fair trade, food standards based on esthetic values and food inspection from a health conservation standpoint. The objects of the last two are often confused, especially by the general public, and as a result, health departments have not yet been able to confine their food inspection activities to purely disease preventive channels."

Lederle, in discussing the subject (7) of "The Function of Municipal Authorities in the Control and Improvement of Food Supplies," states that "In view of the fact that the enforcement of pure food laws and regulations in cities usually falls to the health authorities, and probably rightly so, a serious misapprehension or misunderstanding arises in the minds of the public as to the relative importance of the various phases of the work as a whole compared with other public health problems."

He then makes a comparison with other lines of health activities but concludes by saying "I am nevertheless in absolute sympathy with the closest possible supervision of foods. Even though other problems are of greater importance, it is nevertheless the duty of the government to maintain the purity of our food supply and to prevent both dangerous adulterations and commercial frauds. Foods should be sound, wholesome, unadulterated, prepared with care under proper sanitary conditions and properly labeled. The most contemptible of all law breakers is the adulterator of foods." Further, he says, "Logically, the problem of preventing the deception of the customer by the substitution of harmless but cheaper food ingredients, or the use of unlabeled preservatives, should be clearly distinguished from the protection of the consumer's health by preventing substitutions or adulterations which are really dangerous. In the actual carrying out of our system of administration of food laws, the entire work of food inspection, including both these phases of the problem, is frequently placed upon the municipal health department. The result is that the health department is called upon to perform functions which, strictly speaking, are outside its true field. Nevertheless, public sentiment is so thoroughly aroused on the subject of food adulteration that, once the duty has been placed upon the health officer, the community will tolerate no evasion of the responsibility and looks to the health authorities for protection, not only from physical injury but from dishonesty as well. Not without facing the certainty of severe criticism, can public health authorities relax the inspection and control of certain kinds of food adulteration which they perfectly well realize involve little or no danger to the public health."

That food control is clearly recognized as a proper function of a municipal health department is shown by numerous reports and investigations of the activities of such organizations. Fox (8) and his coworkers of the U. S. Public Health Service, in careful studies of various city departments of health, have invariably given a place to food control in the local health program.

Investigations (9) of city governments by the New York Bureau of Municipal Research also include food control as a proper field of activity. In a report on the Government of the City of Rochester, N. Y. by the N. Y. Bureau of Municipal Research, this significant statement appears. "Investigations conducted by the Bureau of Municipal Research, as well as other civic and municipal organizations, have shown that protection of the food and drug supply is an important part of health service. It has been shown time and time again that thorough inspection and enforcement of health regulations alone can prevent the contamination and adulteration in every possible way of food and drugs."

Ruediger, in a paper on "A Program of Public Health for Towns, Villages and Rural Communities" includes food and drug inspection in the program of activities of such a health department. Phelps, (12) in considering Cooperative Health Administration, under the heading "The Equipment and Duties of a local Health Officer," says "Under the general administrative head there is, first and foremost, a laboratory fully equipped for chemical and bacteriological investigations of milk, water and food and for diagnostic examinations of specimens. * * * Next in order of importance comes the care of the general food supply, especially milk."

The reports (13) of the Committee on Organization and Functions of Municipal Health Departments of the American Public Health Association, include a Bureau of Food Inspection, subdivided into divisions of Milk Inspection, Meat Inspection and General Food Inspection. Water, milk and food supplies, etc. are considered as matters affecting the public health and state that "A health Department should concern itself with all of these matters and the organization should be such that a direct and compelling influence should be exercised over them in every municipality."

The preliminary report (14) of the Committee on the Standardization of the work of Public Health Officials mention the standardization of the work of such branches of a health department as, Child Hygiene, Food Inspection, etc.

Craster, in a paper (15) on "The Health Officer and the enforcement of the law," in discussing food inspection, says "Food and Drug laws governing impure or misbranded foods or drink should be enforced to the utmost. There is no more flagrant extortion of the public than in the sale of bad or adulterated food. The citizen cannot protect himself in this respect and must rely upon the health officer to assure him of the wholesomeness of his purchase. The value of a rigid food inspection goes further than the immediate control of crime, inasmuch as the very future of our race is dependent upon a supply of food free from sophistication and denaturing processes."

Even in the education and training of our public health workers in the various schools of Hygiene and Public Health, provision is made for instruction in the control and analysis of foods.

During the past summer, under the direction of the Training School for Public Service, there was given a course in Public Health Administration which included food and drugs in the program.

According to the foregoing expressions, it must be conceded that food control, as a special health function, is a legitimate field of local health department activity. It must also be admitted that the citizens of a municipality are entitled to the fullest measure of protection against adulteration of their food supply and also its misbranding. While these latter considerations may not have a demonstrable health benefit, no one can possibly urge that, for this reason, they be assigned to some other purely local agency. The supervision, in its broadest sense, of the food supply of a community is, in the final analysis, a local problem. Who will contend that, because of the Federal supervision of foods in interstate commerce, there is no local need of following the sale of such products to the ultimate consumer? Who will maintain that, because of State food laws and State inspection, there is no need for local supervision? The health officer, who relies solely on Federal and State agencies for such protection, is laboring under a mistaken sense of security. Furthermore, the health officer, by the very nature of his responsibilities, must make local inspections of food in their relation to the dissemination of disease. Is it not therefore logical, economical and more efficient that the entire work be conducted by a single agency rather than by a multiplicity of organizations? What is also of significance under such an arrangement is that the state authorities can devote more time to the problems of foods production within the state and give a fuller measure of protection to these smaller local communities where there is no machinery for enforcing a law for the purity of foods.

Fox (16) in his study of Public Health Administration in Baltimore calls particular attention to this point. Lederle, in a paper previously referred to, points out that, in New York City, the inspection and control of foods locally produced and sold by the city Department of health leaves the State departments free to spend the greater part of their energies outside the metropolis.

A comprehensive local program of food control will therefore include the following provisions: 1. Adequate local ordinances controlling the adulteration or misbranding of foods or full authority to use existing state laws. 2. Adequate legal provision for the protection of foodstuffs from contamination. 3. Adequate laws governing the sanitation of foods in their production, distribution and sale. 4. Close supervision over the health of all food handlers. 5. Ample appropriations for the proper execution of the above laws. 6. Efficient, well-trained subordinates to make such laws effective. 7. A competent directive head for these activities. 8. A well-defined program of action. 9. Full cooperation with Federal and State authorities.

McCombs, (17) in an extremely interesting paper on protection against food contamination, has pointed out very clearly the value and need of some of the above local activities. Such a program also gives each agency a definite field of action. It is the duty of the Federal authorities to control foods produced in the state and their interstate movements. It is the duty of the State to control foods in the state and their intrastate movements. It is the responsibility of the municipality to complete the chain of protection by controlling the final transfer to the ultimate consumer.

Thus there is no overlapping of effort: each agency has a separate and distinct field of action: they are coordinated and each is an integral part of our complex modern civilization.

When we consider the field of drug control, similar considerations apply. Here there is a very real need for the development of municipal activity. Today there are not half a dozen cities in this country making any efforts in this direction. What state drug control official will affirm that he is able to control adequately the distribution of the many U. S. P. and N. F. preparations in a large city within his State, or the accuracy of compounded prescriptions? Such work, in our larger municipalities, can be handled more effectively by the local department. In this field also, the same clean line of demarcation between Federal, State and Municipal control can be drawn.

A program such as the above makes for efficiency and the fulfillment of our ideals as food and drug control officials. As Asst. Surgeon General Rucker of the U. S. Public Health Service has so aptly said in a paper (18) on Public Health Administration; The factors on which its efficiency depends, "The watchword of the age is efficiency—the doing away with haphazard methods and the substitution therefor of the methods of precision. Efficiency consists in the accomplishment of a given task in the minimum of time and with the minimum of effort. To accomplish this it is necessary that one know exactly what he wants to do and that he have the power with which to do it.

CONCLUSIONS.

1. Food and drug control, in its local application, is a properly exercised function of a municipality.
2. Such local control is logically and properly vested in the department of health.
3. The local agency is best suited and equipped to give the citizens of a municipality that degree of protection to which they are entitled.
4. The municipal authorities are the last protective barrier before the food and drug products reach the ultimate consumer.
5. Full cooperation between Federal, State and Municipal authorities in the control of foods and drugs is essential.
6. A well-developed, harmonious plan of action involving these three agencies is a requisite to securing proper teamplay. As Vincent (19) so admirably stated in a trenchant address on Teamplay in Public Health "The essential thing in teamplay is that each participant shall not lose his identity but shall subordinate his individual purposes to the common interest, and shall do his part loyally in accordance with a plan which is accepted by all and which gives unity and efficiency to the combined endeavor."

PUBLICITY IN FOOD AND DRUG CONTROL.

By JAMES FOUST, Pennsylvania.

Publicity is the watchword of the hour. Propaganda in various forms pervades every avenue of American life and engages the energies and the genius of a host of disseminators of information. Some of this publicity is benevolent and helpful, much of it is baleful and injurious. There was an enormous amount of harmful propaganda afloat during the great war. This did not so much concern the prosecution of that splendid effort to preserve and enlarge the world's freedom, but was especially injurious in creating unnecessary alarm concerning the ability of the people to procure such prime necessities of life as sugar, salt and other articles of common use. Some indiscreet persons also do harm by foolish and untruthful propaganda. Many of these do not act from interested motives, but they seem unable to restrain their tongues. With them, as in the days of the Apostle James, the tongue is an unruly member. Here is a specific instance: Some years ago a certain food control official made the public declaration that he would not eat oysters for the reason that they disseminated disease. This was a glaring instance of harmful publicity, for the man had no facts in his possession to substantiate or support his statement. The language of this food control official was to the detriment and injury of a great industry, because his position gave an undue influence to everything he said. It is a well known fact that for years past the government of the United States spared neither money nor men to improve and keep clear the oyster beds. When placed on the market oysters are as pure as any other food, but they may become contaminated by exposure or by carelessness.

Here is another and much more commendable instance of the fruits of publicity. By co-operation in this matter the National Canners' Association has revolutionized the canning industry. By the expenditure of large sums of money and the exercise of scientific skill in reaching the public through various interesting publications, this association has absolutely eliminated the odium associated with the industry a quarter of a century ago. The members of the association got their products right and then proved the truth of their statement by the superior quality of their goods.

The same principle applies to the Specialty Manufacturers' Association, the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and also to the State Wholesale Grocers' Associations. These are truly wonderful organizations, reaching every section of our country. They have at their heads the brightest business minds the country is capable of producing. In each branch of the business there are brilliant orators, convincing writers, all working together harmoniously for the purpose of bringing to pass the very thing for which food control offices were established. If we confine our publicity efforts to the preparation of such articles as the newspapers of the country will publish, we will be doing only a small part of our work as food and drug control officials.

"Publicity" is a remarkable word. What does it mean? It means the dissipation of ignorance, the removal of prejudice, the bringing in of light, the increase of knowledge, whenever it is properly applied to the problems in which the American people are interested and concerning which every citizen, every housewife, should possess first-hand information. It embraces many ways and methods and the resources of the most fruitful minds may be well employed during every waking hour in bringing to pass general information along helpful lines. Many of the country's most menacing perils would cease to menace either the health or the happiness of the common people if they possessed abundant knowledge concerning foods, their uses, their benefits, their abuses.

Let me close this brief talk by asking a few vital questions concerning the things in which we are so deeply interested. Perhaps some of these queries may interest you; perhaps you have not thought about some of them; perhaps you have not tried the experiment of keeping them in daily mind. If not, will you not take a note of them and try the effect of faithful fulfillment of the obligations and opportunities at which they merely hint?

Are you co-operating with the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington? Are you asking assistance from Dr. Alsberg and Dr. Abbott, of that Bureau? Are you asking them to make known through the Clearing House Letter what is being done in your State?

Do you have at hand for immediate use a Directory of the newspapers of your State?

Do you have in your office a directory of all the country's trade publications?

Do you classify your lists of trade publications so that you may instantly communicate to each class the sort of information which they will print because it is extremely likely to interest their readers?

Those who act upon the foregoing suggestions will find them extremely useful in the business of forwarding their work.

Do you have a revised list of the officers of the State and subordinate Granges and are you in touch with the Grange officers?

Do you take pains to make your articles brief and interesting in order to increase the likelihood that they will be published and read?

Brevity is of the first importance. The people of this era turn away from long and prosaic articles, even when the newspapers print them, which is increasingly seldom. Editors are not very partial to long articles.

A FEW DON'TS

Don't forget to keep in close touch with the newspaper boys of the city in which you are located, and, as far as possible, in the State at large.

Don't forget to keep cheerful.

Don't forget to hear with patience the statements of all who enter your office.

Don't forget to make your wants known to the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington.

Don't forget to co-operate with other State and local food control officials.

Don't forget to keep in touch with the strong, legitimate trade organizations.

Don't forget to thank the secretary of this association for the many courtesies extended.

Don't forget that you are the servant of all, even under very unsatisfactory conditions.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CO-OPERATION 1919.

Mr. President, and Members of the Association of American, Dairy, Food and Drug Officials: Your Committee on Co-operation respectfully submits the following report:

During the past year there has been more effective co-operation among city, state and federal food and drug control officials than ever before. The details of such co-operation have been reported monthly in the Monthly Review of the Bureau of Chemistry which is the clearing house letter of such officials. It is not necessary, therefore, to repeat them in this report. Such co-operation, however, related mainly to actual field work in searching for violations of food and drug laws and in prosecuting the offenders.

There has been some, but not enough co-operation in the work of securing data as a basis of interpretation of the results of analyses of commercial samples of foods and drugs. Your Committee respectfully recommends to food and drug investigators a more serious consideration of this phase of co-operation. It does not appear to be in harmony with good business principles in a matter of such general and common public interest as adulterated and misbranded foods and drugs for a single food and drug control agency or a single man or woman without collaborating with any other agency or person to undertake to determine, for example, the composition of fruit juices of fruits grown in States under different geographic and variable climatic conditions. Such a course results in either unpardonable delay or doubtful basis of law enforcement. Information of this sort is of course the first necessity in a consideration of adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs. You have for the most part delegated this function to the Joint Committee on Definitions and Standards, composed of three members of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials, three of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and three of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. But without your most energetic and hearty co-operation this work will be long drawn out and possibly not be done with that comprehensiveness that its importance demands. In consideration of these facts, your Committee has repeatedly recommended.

"That food and drug officials collaborate with each other on investigational problems relating to the enforcement of food and drug laws and the data obtained through such collaboration be distributed promptly among such officials."

In view of the necessity for such co-operation, there was formed in this Association a few years ago a scientific section composed for the most part of the analysis in food and drug control organizations. But under the provisions of the constitution these analysts were not entitled to membership in the Association and therefore could not constitute a section of it. They are therefore compelled to carry on their co-operative work outside of this association. Hence your Committee has repeatedly recommended.

"That the constitution of this Association be amended so as to admit to membership in it all city, state, and federal food and drug control officials."

For administrative purposes, food and drug control agencies generally provide for three rather distinct groups of officials, viz., inspectors, analysts, and executive officers. A national association composed of all three groups seems desirable. A separate national association for each group is unthinkable. That only executive officers are in need of association work, or that they can do all the work that is necessary to be done by an association, is a fallacy nowhere found in the empire of reason.

Next in importance to this phase of co-operation, if not on all fours with it, is co-operation among the executive officers themselves in the establishment of general policies or general principles of food and drug law enforcement. Conventions of this Association come and go. Many interesting and instructive papers are read and addresses delivered. But as one of the distinguished ex-presidents of the Association has frequently observed, we do not settle anything. Has any food and drug control agency ever announced, for example, a comprehensive general policy or principle in relation to added color in food? The laws uniformly provide that an article of food is adulterated when colored in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed. The sale of adulterated food is prohibited. When color conceals damage or inferiority in an article of food, can such an article be sold at all? If so, under what conditions? Do such expressions on labels, as "colored", "artificially colored", "added color", or the like, reveal to the consumer the damage or inferiority of the article and make it a legitimate article of trade? If neither damage nor inferiority is concealed by color, is it necessary under the law, or does it give to the consumer any useful information, to declare color on the label? The laws further uniformly provide that "compounds", "mixtures", "imitations", and "blends" are neither adulterated nor misbranded when known under their own distinctive names and labeled in conformity with certain minor requirements, or when they are plainly labeled to indicate that they are "compounds," "imitations", or "blends" and the word "compound", "imitation" or "blend" as the case may be, is stated upon the label. What about color in such preparations? Even when color aids chiefly in making an article an imitation of another article, are such terms as "colored", "added color" and the like, ever sufficient in themselves to indicate that the article is an "imitation", "compound" or "blend", a specific requisite to its compliance with the law? May there not be other properties or constituents of imitations that are necessary to be declared in order to indicate plainly that they are "imitations", "compounds" or "blends"?

Many opinions on color in many specific foods have been rendered by many agencies, but has a general policy with respect to color ever been announced by any agency? Proceeding from one specific case to another and to another, as infinitum, considering each case on its own merits, is poor logic and poor administration; for it is as laborious as it is uncertain. But it is not difficult to make a specific case square with a general policy. The following recommendation of your Committee made repeatedly to this Association and adopted by it should be put into effect:

"That at least one day of each annual convention of this Association be set apart for an executive session of the Association for the purpose of discussing purely executive and administrative problems."

This Association is, by the very terms of its constitution, an Association of executive officers. Hence it should in a greater degree function as such.

It is not possible for all executive officers to get together often enough to discuss with each other all matters of general policy arising in the enforcement of similar food and drug laws. But each officer can take the time to consider the policies adopted by other officials if he can get hold of such policies. In the absence of any common medium for the publication of such policies, they may be published from time to time as regulations, bulletins, announcements, opinions, rulings, or decisions of the executive officers, agencies, or departments. There can be no co-operation in such matters unless every agency knows what every other agency stands for. Your Committee has therefore respectfully recommended repeatedly "That food and drug control officials compile all of their food inspection opinions for distribution among each other."

This is especially important as to general policies or principles. When sound principles shall have been adopted, specific cases will take care of themselves.

Some other recommendations of greater or less importance have been made from time to time which appear to be worthy of repetition. While you have adopted them, you have not generally put them into practice. They are submitted again without argument with the hope that food and drug control agencies may yet be constrained to function in harmony therewith. They are that officials furnish each other and the Office of Co-operation of the Bureau of Chemistry, U. S. Department of Agriculture:

1. Their programs and plans of work,
2. Monthly reports of their important activities of general interest to other officials,
3. Notices of changes in their organizations and in the personnel of their organizations,
4. New rulings or food and drug inspection opinions,
5. New legislation,
6. Compilations of their definitions and standards, both Statutory and Administrative,
7. That a standing committee be appointed to report at each annual convention on the court decisions handed down during the year in a way that will guide the officials in the administration of food and drug laws.
8. That State officials endeavor to establish plans of co-operation between State food and drug departments and the food and drug bureaus of the health departments of the cities of their respective States.

9. That the Executive Committee of this Association prepare the programs soon enough for thorough preparation of the papers to be read at its conventions.

THIS MAN WATCHES FOR IMPURE FOOD.

From the Public Ledger.

Robert M. Simmers, Philadelphia's district agent of the Bureau of Foods of the State Agriculture Department, who has been ordered to aid the federal authorities in their effort to cut down the high cost of food, is one of the most interesting men in public service. To begin with, he is seventy-four, but doesn't look a day older than fifty years.

"How did you manage to keep yourself in such splendid trim?" he was asked. His answer:

"I've been active all my life, most of the time out in the country; have had steady habits; above all, have never tasted liquor."

Mr. Simmers was born in a log house at Warwick Furnace, Pa., in 1845. One of his ancestors made cannon for Washington's army at Warwick Furnace. This was his grandfather, Daniel Simmers. Before the Revolutionary War Daniel Simmers used to make the original tin-plate cooking stoves, but when hostilities began the Warwick Furnace was converted into a munition factory.

Four big cannon were ready for shipment to Washington's army when the British invaded the part of the country where the factory was and, lest the cannon fall into the enemy's hands, they were thrown into a deep part of the creek near by. They were found ten years ago and two of them were sent to the national capitol; the other two are exhibited at Phoenixville, Chester County.

At sixteen on July 13, 1861, Robert M. Simmers, the grandson of this Revolutionary cannon maker, enlisted in the Union army. He fought in thirteen battles and was wounded at the battle of South Mountain in 1862. He was honorably mustered out after a service of three years.

When he returned from the war he began his studies, going to school for the three winter months in 1865 and 1866. That was virtually all the formal schooling Mr. Simmers ever received. He has taught himself or gained by experience or in conversation and reading the bulk of what he knows.

He is commander of Post 45, G. A. R., Phoenixville. One of his sons is a commander in the navy; another is in business in Philadelphia.

A FINE TRIBUTE TO THE KIND-FACED COW.

By HON. FRANK O. LOWDEN, Governor of Illinois.

The cow is a most wonderful laboratory. She takes the grasses of the pasture, and the roughage of the field, and converts them into the most perfect food for man. In that food there is a mysterious something which scientists have found essential to the highest health of the human race, and which can be found nowhere else. Men have sought for centuries the fabled Fountain of Youth. The nearest approach to that fountain which has yet been discovered is the udder of the cow. Without her milk, children languish, the vigor of the adult declines, and the vitality of the human race runs low. Millions of these gentle unobtrusive 'foster mothers' of man have become the victims of this war. The world faces a shortage of dairy products. Let us of Illinois help meet this shortage in every way we can.

COMMERCIAL EGGS CLASSIFIED

In order that there may be no confusion or misunderstanding with reference to the enforcement of the new law prohibiting the sale of eggs for and as "fresh eggs" that are not fresh eggs, as may appear upon proper test, James Foust, Director of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, issues the following statement:

There are four classes of eggs—

1. A "fresh egg" is one that is understood to have the following qualities: Its white is capable of whipping well; in cooking it can be satisfactorily poached or soft boiled; it has not absorbed foreign disagreeable odors; its embryo shall not have developed appreciably. The yolk should be fairly stiff and well rounded and the white should not be watery, and the chalaza shall be well defined.

2. Cold storage eggs must be sold in accordance with Cold Storage Law and must be represented and labeled "Cold storage eggs."

3. Eggs kept for a period of time by the water glass, lime or other methods that cannot be classified as "fresh eggs" but are edible, wholesome and suitable for all food purposes except such as require "fresh eggs."

4. Eggs that are decayed, partly decayed, or decomposed and unfit for food purposes, have a commercial value for tanning leather such as is used in the manufacture of gloves. Rotten eggs must be promptly denatured with kerosene oil, and when opened must be placed in a container painted a bright red color. It is unlawful to open rotten eggs and remove the content from the shell in establishments where food products are prepared or manufactured, or to open rotten eggs in an establishment where good eggs are opened for food purposes.

The Board of Chemists held a special conference which lasted from seven o'clock in the evening until after midnight, in the office of Secretary Rasmussen of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture. There were present Chemists Aschman, Pittsburgh; Evans, Erie; Frear, State College; Huber and Kellogg, Harrisburg; LaWall, Philadelphia, and Schoen, Scranton. Director of the Bureau of Foods James Foust directed the conference.

Samples of eggs had been collected by Agent Simmers of the Philadelphia District, who had full data concerning every sample submitted. They covered a range of cold storage eggs of several ages, one day old eggs, western fresh eggs and eggs preserved by several well known methods used in household practice.

These samples were submitted under number only to the group of chemists for decision as to their character, and in every case they were correctly classified for interpretation of the provisions of the newly enacted Fresh Egg Law.

As each sample was submitted the chemists individually made their decisions which unanimously agreed in each case, and as each result was announced Mr. Simmers' facts regarding the origin of the particular sample were stated and were found to absolutely confirm the decision arrived at by the chemists as to the age and classification of the eggs.

The factors which are taken into account in classifying eggs as to their freshness are the size of the air space, the specific gravity, the condition of the white and of the yolk after opening, the appearance of the chalaza, besides various confirmatory chemical tests and cooking tests.

A fresh egg is one that is understood to have the following qualities:

Its white is capable of whipping well, in cooking it can be satisfactorily poached or soft boiled, it has not absorbed foreign disagreeable odors, its embryo shall not have developed appreciably. The yolk should be fairly stiff and well rounded and the white should not be watery and the chalaza shall be well defined.

Eggs held in the warmer portion of the year lose their quality of freshness much more rapidly than in the colder months. Even when kept in a cool room they lose their quality of freshness in about three weeks.

With the present high prices of eggs it is only fair that the purchaser who asks for and pays for fresh eggs is entitled to receive them and it was for this purpose that the fresh egg law was enacted at the last session of the Legislature.

As soon as the State Printer is able to supply the Department with copies of the Law these will be distributed to the trade and to the public, after which time the law will be enforced.

A conference was held with Secretary Rasmussen of the Penna. Department of Agriculture, Director of Food Bureau, James Foust, Chemist Charles H. LaWall and Special Agent, R. M. Simmers, to determine two points that have been raised by the trade in connection with the recently enacted Fresh Egg Law.

First: As to what is meant or understood by the chalaza.

The chalaza is the thicker portion of the egg white immediately surrounding the yolk and holding it in its proper place in the centre of the egg. As the egg ages the chalaza weakens and becomes thinner and the yolk sinks to the side of the shell where it sometimes becomes attached in very old eggs.

Second: After what period of time does an egg lose its identity as a fresh egg in interpreting the act.

This depends upon many factors among which are the following:

First: An egg laid in March or April and kept under proper conditions will retain the characteristics which distinguish a fresh egg for from three to four weeks. In warmer weather this time would necessarily have to be reduced, and an egg laid in very hot weather and possibly allowed to remain in the nest for twenty-four hours or more, has lost these characteristics to such an extent that it is not as good as an April egg kept for a month under favorable conditions, and it should not be offered for sale nor be permitted to be sold as and for a fresh egg.

Nor can an egg which is allowed to remain exposed to ordinary atmospheric conditions in a retail store for several days or a week in warm weather be expected to retain the characteristics which are expected of a fresh egg.

Gen. Agent Simmers brought up at the conference also the fact that saccharin had recently been reduced in price from $42.00 a pound to $6.00 a pound, and it was decided to start an investigation throughout the entire State, and arrests will be made in every instance where saccharin or other adulterates are found to be used.

Mr. Simmers stated that he is having many complaints of illness which is believed to be caused by tainted meat or fish which has not been kept properly refrigerated previous to its preparation. This matter was also directed to be investigated promptly, and Mr. Simmers was directed to confer on this point with Chief Vogelson of the Bureau of Health and Sanitation.

The Conference was held in the office of Prof. Charles H. LaWall at 39 South 10th St., Philadelphia.

CONCERNING BLEACHED FLOUR.

This number of the Monthly Bulletin is made up largely of papers, correspondence, etc., dealing with the subject of bleached flour. The space thus used is not wasted, for there is no current subject before the people of Pennsylvania that is more important than this. The persistent efforts made in the past to secure in this Commonwealth the passage of a law permitting the manufacture and sale of bleached flour shows the urgent necessity of educating the minds of the people in the right direction. Doubtless another effort will be made to enact this vicious legislation when the next legislature convenes. It will fail if the voters of each legislative district are alive to the importance of preventing such legislation.

Our first article is a paper by the late James H. Shepard, physical chemist, for many years prominently connected with the food control work of South Dakota. Dr. Shepard did considerable experimental work in connection with this bleached flour proposition. His paper should be studied with care and his conclusions noted.

Following Dr. Shepard's paper we present a summary of the testimony given by Dr. John Marshall and Dr. Alfred Stengel, both of the University of Pennsylvania, given in a bleached flour trial conducted by the government of the United States in 1911. This testimony deals with the physical effects of nitrous acid on the human system. Both these gentlemen have acquired a national reputation and their conclusions ought to go very far with the public.

There are also copies of two letters from Dr. J. S. Abbott, chemist in charge of the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington, D. C. Also one letter from Dr. C. F. Alsberg, chief of the bureau of chemistry, on the same subject.

Next we have a statement concerning the attitude of the various states of the union toward the manufacture and sale of bleached flour. It will be observed that three states prohibit the manufacture and sale of this product. These are North Dakota, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin. In a way, all the other states follow the attitude of the national government. Nebraska constitutes a lone exception. She permits such manufacture and sale, largely because the wheat produced in the state differs in appearance from that of other states. In order to meet competition that state has legalized the manufacture and sale of bleached flour. It seems an unkind necessity, one which fortunately does not exist in Pennsylvania.

Determined efforts have been made to secure "liberal" legislation in this regard in Pennsylvania. Three legislatures in this state have passed bills legalizing the manufacture and sale of bleached flour. Fortunately these bills were vetoed by three successive governors, each of whom gave emphatic and cogent reasons for his action. In one instance it was declared that "this is no time to let down the bars."

The bleaching of flour is a fraud upon the public. It produces a poisonous acid in the flour which renders the bread made from such flour positively injurious to health. Bread is the staff of life. Nitrous acid is a vicious antiseptic and any course of reasoning that would permit its use would also permit the use of any or all the other chemical antiseptics known. The three governors of Pennsylvania who knew the truth and acted upon it deserve the sincere and lasting thanks of the people of this Commonwealth.

NITROUS ACID AS AN ANTISEPTIC

By James H. Shepard, Chemist, S. Dakota Pure Food Commission.

During the past few years, enormous quantities of nitrous acid have been employed in preparing the various grades of flours derived from wheat. Various comparisons between treated and untreated flours have been made and widely differing conclusions have been drawn. There is one aspect of the case, however, that has not been thoroughly investigated. Nitrous acid has not been used primarily as an antiseptic. It has been employed as a bleaching agent just the same as sulphur dioxide has been used in bleaching hops and dried fruits. Unfortunately for sulphur dioxide, it lent itself readily to the preservation of fresh meat products. Consequently its antiseptic properties were soon investigated and sulphur dioxide was placed in its proper class along with other powerful chemical preservatives. Thus far nitrous acid has escaped the fate of sulphur dioxide.

Nearly all investigations have been conducted along lines tending to show the effect of nitrous acid on gluten strength, loaf volume, etc., while the antiseptic properties of this chemical have been neglected. Professor Ladd in his paper read before this Association at Jamestown last year stated it as his belief that the use of nitrous acid was harmful and deleterious to the flour. Professor Alway, Bulletin 102, Nebraska, concludes that the use of nitrous acid in flour is harmless basing his belief upon the doctrine of the harmless nature of small quantities of the reagent employed.

But it seemed to the writer that the most satisfactory way of dealing with this problem would be to experiment directly with nitrous acid to determine its effect upon the digestive enzymes themselves. Accordingly during the past year I have planned, and with the aid of my assistant, Mr. Koch, carried out a series of investigations along the lines indicated. I believe the results we have obtained are of sufficient importance to warrant my offering them for the consideration of this Association.

At the outset I wish to state that our work has been very carefully planned and executed and special precautions have been employed to avoid the creeping in of errors.

Our reagents have received special care and many preliminary trials were made in the different series in order to insure the reliability of the results obtained. The experiments were carried on in glass tubes ranged in series in a special water bath allowing easy control of temperature. In every series blanks were run in order to eliminate any variations caused by slight variations in temperature or in the activity of the enzymes themselves.

The nitrous acid was prepared by dissolving nitrogen peroxide in water. The peroxide was obtained by reduction of nitric acid. The peroxide fumes were dissolved in cold water until the solution assumed a decidedly blue color. This strong acid was preserved in a cool place and small portions were diluted with water from time to time as needed. The strength of this dilute solution was determined by titration with standard alkali. The amounts of acid used are expressed in every instance as peroxide.

I am well aware that our acid was not pure nitrous acid, owing to the fact that when nitrogen peroxide comes in contact with water, varying proportions of nitrous and nitric acids are produced. But this is just exactly what takes place when the peroxide fumes are used in bleaching flour. There is always sufficient moisture in the flour and in the air to change the peroxide into nitrous and nitric acids. Investigators have agreed that the bleaching is due to the peroxide placing special stress upon the nitrous acid or nitrites formed, disregarding the nitric acid. But we were well content to return the total acidity as nitrous acid, since by so doing we have in every case used less nitrous acid than our figures indicate.

Whether the nitric acid is of such small moment or not I do not propose to discuss, but I do believe that we have closely approximated the actual conditions prevailing in flouring mills where the peroxide of nitrogen is used. Owing to the fact that the peroxide is a strong anhydride it is almost certain that the first change in the peroxide when liberated in the stream of descending flour is to pass into the acid state and then to attack the flour, forming nitrates and nitrites.

The first experiments were concerned with nitrous acid on diastase and starch. In these experiments exactly 200 mgs. air dried corn starch were weighed into each tube, 25 ccs. of water were added and the starch was then cooked to a homogeneous paste. The water bath was kept at 55°C. By experiment the proper amount of the particular diastase used was found to digest a blank in about three hours for Series 1. In Series 2, the diastase was increased so that the blank would digest in about 15 minutes. The reaction was complete when the contents of any tube failed to respond to the iodine test for starch. Beginning with a certain proportion of peroxide to the starch employed, continually decreasing quantities of that chemical were added to the tubes until a point was reached where the delicacy of the method made no distinction between the tube containing the acid and the blank.

The following table gives the results obtained:

Nitrous Acid on Diastase and Starch.
SERIES 1.

No. Tube.	Parts No2 to Starch.	Parts No2 to Solution.	Time of Digestion.	Per cent. Retardation.
1	1:25	1:3125	Inhibits digestion.	Incomp. after 23 hours.
2	1:50	1:625	Inhibits digestion.	Incomp. after 23 hours.
3	1:75	1:9375	Inhibits digestion.	Incomp. after 23 hours.
4	1:100	1:12500	Inhibits digestion.	Incomp. after 23 hours.
5	Blank	Blank	2 hrs. 35 mins.

SERIES 2.

No. Tube.	Parts No2 to Starch.	Parts No2 to Solution.	Time of Digestion.	Per cent. Retardation.
1	1:200	1:25000	31 min.	121%
2	1:300	1:37500	14 min.
3	1:400	1:50000	14 min.
5	Blank	Blank	14 min.

It will be noticed that the third column gives the proportions of peroxide to the solution thus indicating the dilution of the peroxide. It will be seen that all strengths above 12500 parts of solution to one of peroxide inhibit digestion. One part of peroxide to 37500 and on down digests with the blank. At all intermediate points the peroxide seriously interferes with digestion. These experiments show that nitrous acid is a powerful antiseptic and were undertaken to throw some light if possible upon the action of this chemical upon the flour itself.

It is a well known fact that wheat flour carries several important enzymes itself. For instance there is an amolytic enzyme which digests the starch and there are several proteolytic enzymes that act upon the proteids and there is now thought to be an erepsin that causes a further degradation of the digestion products of the peptic enzymes. The advocates of nitrous bleaching claim that the acid simply artificially aids in ripening the flour besides bleaching it. But it is a well known fact that grain cured perfectly dry in the shock, when stacked, undergoes a "sweat" from which the wheat berry emerges much improved for milling. Again when the stacked grain after becoming perfectly dry is threshed and stored in a bin, it undergoes another "sweat" which improves the wheat still further. And finally when this wheat is now milled, if the flour is not treated with chemicals, it undergoes a third "sweat" in the flour. This cycle constitutes the natural curing and ripening process for the grain and flour. But when the flour is treated with nitrous acid this third and last change does not occur. What has happened? The advocates of nitrous acid say the aging of the flour has been hastened artificially. But let us see. What has caused these "sweats" or fermentations in the natural process of aging? The nature of the action or effects produced on the berry and on the flour points to the agency of enzymes as the cause of the sweatings or ripenings. This being true the addition of nitrous acid to a flour simply paralyzes the enzymes of the flour thus completely preventing the third ripening stage. This process renders the flour just that much more difficult to digest. But is this all the acid does to the flour? It is conceded that it unites with the oil which is bleached. It is also thought to combine with the ash constituents, but this action must be slight, since there is no likelihood of its replacing any acid but carbonic and phosphoric. The sulphates and chlorides would resist its action effectively.

But it is not so certain that the starches and proteids of the flour would escape some damage by the action of the nitric acid and nitrous acid fumes. It is well known that nitric acid breaks up starch and generates oxalic acid, a deadly poison. Again it is well known that nitrous acid disintegrates the proteids to a certain extent. Thus Mann (Chemistry of the Proteids, page 96) concludes that when proteids are treated with nitrous acid the amido compounds remain unaltered or slightly increase, while the total nitrogen is diminished. But the amid compounds have little or no nutritive value. Whence then this loss of nitrogen if not from the digestible and nutritious albuminoids? Or in other words the nutritive albuminoids are lessened in quantity by the use of nitrous acid.

But we must pass on to the digestive enzymes of the human system and see to what extent they tolerate the presence of the nitrous acid.

NITROUS ACID ON PTYALIN AND STARCH.

When food is taken into the mouth and masticated it is mixed with saliva which carries a very energetic enzyme, ptyalin, which converts starch into reducing sugars. In the following experiments one gram of starch was cooked to a smooth paste with 40 cc. water in a sugar flask and 5 cc. of tenth normal saliva were added and the bath was kept at 40°C. The time of digestion was exactly five minutes. At the expiration of that time each flask was filled to the mark with 95% alcohol, cooled to room temperature, filled to the mark again, filtered and polarized in a 200 mm. tube, using a polariscope giving readings in percentages of cane sugar. These readings were used in obtaining comparisons since we found them more reliable than the iodine and reaction. While a great number of determinations were made I shall give one series only:

TABLE II.

Nitrous Acid on Ptyalin and Starch.

No. Flask.	Parts No2 to Starch.	Parts No2 to Solution.	Reading of Polariscope.	Per cent. Retardation.
1	1:150	1:13500	5.9	Inhibits digestion.
2	1:150	1:67500	3.0	Inhibits digestion.
3	1:250	1:90000	4.5	43%
4	1:250	1:112500	5.6	48%
5	1:350	1:135000	6.2	14%
6	1:500	1:225000	7.0	---
7	1:1500	1:450000	7.0	---
8	Blank	Blank	7.0	---

From the foregoing table it will appear that one part of nitrous acid to 67500 prevents digestion entirely. Between that proportion and 1:135000 digestion is seriously delayed. No ordinary chemical preservative equals nitrous acid in its antiseptic properties. It might be objected by some that the time of digestion was too short. So I will select two results from another series. Semi-normal saliva was used, the acid was 1:25000 of solution and the time was 30 minutes. The reading of the polariscope was C.O. while the accompanying blank gave a reading of 7.2%. The short time of digestion and the dilute solution of saliva were chosen on account of the vigor and rapidity with which ptyalin acts.

NITROUS ACID ON PEPSIN AND EGG ALBUMEN.

When food enters the stomach it comes in contact with the gastric juice which carries a powerful enzyme, pepsin, which digests the albuminoids. Much work was done with nitrous acid and pepsin. Boiled white of eggs which had been finely divided by rubbing through a forty mesh sieve was the albumen used and of which 2 grams was used in each trial. A solution of pepsin in water carrying two-tenths per cent. hydrochloric acid was made so that 25 ccs. of the solution should carry just 4 mgs. of pepsin. 25ccs. of this solution at about 40°C. was used in each trial. I deem this work so important that two series will be given:

The foregoing table speaks for itself. When an antiseptic can make itself manifest in proportions of 1:100000 it is certainly no fit ingredient in any item in the human dietary. Nitrous acid is rivaled only by hydrofluoric acid as an antiseptic. But there are some things that the table does not show. In Series 1 the acid gave a marked anthoproteic reaction with the albumen, which was colored a pronounced yellow. At all times during the digestion fumes of nitrous acid were given off and in the cases of the first numbers in the series practically no digestion took place during the first hour. Not until the nitrous acid was nearly eliminated did the digestion proceed, when it progressed rapidly. So marked was this phenomenon that we corked tube 8 with a tightly fitting rubber stopper, and although there was considerable space above the liquid where the nitrous acid fumes could collect, the digestion was retarded 24% as compared with 7, and an open tube. Tube 9 has a bearing on the union of the acid with albumen. In all the other tubes the acid was added to the tube after all the other ingredients. In this one the acid was added direct to the albumen. After a short time the pepsin solution was poured in and the digestion began. This tube shows a retardation of 15% as compared with a regular open tube. From this one might reasonably expect that nitrous acid added directly to flour would produce more profound disturbance than our results would indicate.

In Series 2, it is to be regretted that a series of tubes was not prepared between 100000 and 200000 in order to find the limit where the nitrous acid ceases to manifest itself with the method employed. Especially is this true since tube 5 for some unaccountable reason gave results apparently higher than would be expected from the behavior of the preceding tubes. We will next take up the enzymes of pancreatin.

NITROUS ACID ON PANCREATIN AND STARCH.

After leaving the stomach the food is brought into contact with the pancreatic juice which carries several active enzymes capable of digesting all the nutriments of food. These enzymes are called collectively pancreatin. In the experiments made pancreatin was allowed to act on starch.

One gram of starch was placed in a sugar flask and cooked to a smooth past with 50CC. of water. 300 Mgs. of pancreatin were added and the digestion was carried on for just 30 minutes at a temperature of 40°C. The flasks were then filled with 95% alcohol to stop the action of the enzymes, cooled, etc., as in the case of ptyalin. The readings of the polariscope were taken for comparisons. I will give one series.

TABLE IV.
NITROUS ACID ON PANCREATIN AND STARCH.

15	Blank	Blank	6.8	---

This table confirms the results obtained with the other enzymes and proves that the enzymes of pancreatin are seriously affected by nitrous acid. Any chemical in dilution of one part to one hundred thousand which will retard digestion nearly 25% should not be permitted in any food product in any quantity whatever. And more especially is this true in the case of flour which is eaten in one or more forms three times a day and 365 days in the year and all the years of a man's life.

In conclusion it might be well enough to make some general strictures upon the bleaching process. Alway (loc. cit) has found varying quantities of nitrite in bleached flours averaging 6.3 parts per million. But in many instances the amount reached 10, 20, and in a few cases 30 parts per million. But 10 parts per million is the same as one part in 100000. Twenty parts per million is the same as one part in 50000. An inspection of the tables will show that nitrous acid is capable of doing much mischief at those dilutions. It is true that Alway reported nitrite as sodium nitrite. But it is also true that he made no allowances for nitric acid or nitrates. In our work the latter acid was taken into consideration. Hence the figures are fairly comparable.

One thing further must be said in this connection, and that is, this nitrite is not eliminated in the baking. While it is apparently diminished there is no certainty that it is actually diminished. It may be so held that the usual analytical process fails to extract it from the bread. I have been able to recover from one-half to one-third of the nitrite in bread that was carried by the flour from which the bread was made. But even if one-half of the nitrite is lost in baking it does not help the matter much. What reasonable man can say that this constant and insistent dosing of the human system with such a powerful antiseptic as nitrous acid in any quantity whatever is a wholesome and hygienic practice? Is it not about time that the American people took steps so effective that bread, the staff of life, may come on the table pure and free from poisonous chemicals?

And then again, who said that the best bread should be white? What great and eminent physician or hygienist has said that the health giving and muscle building qualities of bread are indexed and augmented by an increasing scale of whiteness? Once again I ask, who has said it? You may depend upon it that even Echo will hang her head in shame and refuse to answer. Whiteness is indicative of starch. Starch is cheaper and more plentiful in potatoes. Protein is characterized by a yellowish tint. Bread, the universal food of this Nation is and should be valued for its protein content.

Or is this whiteness in bread simply another phase of the color craze which has swept over the country? If so, and if the "trade" demands white bread, why not be sensible and drop dangerous chemicals and bleach the dough instead by aeration? This is both practical and feasible. Even every housewife may have a bread mixer if she will take natural flour and by forcing air through the dough produce the desired shade or degree of whiteness.

The addition of nitrous acid to flour is not only useless, but from a hygienic and dietetic standpoint it is dangerous. Old and young, strong and weak, well and sick, all depend upon bread and they should have it without poisonous chemicals. It is not contended here that bleached flour carries nitrous acid in toxic doses, but it is contended that there is sufficient nitrite present to retard digestion, and to make it a constant menace to health. Such things beget indigestion and a host of minor ills that tend to sap the vital energies of the consumer and render him an easy prey to prevalent diseases and epidemics.

Nitrous acid is a vicious antiseptic and any course of reasoning that will permit its use will also permit the use of any or all the other chemical antiseptics known.

TESTIMONY OF DR. JOHN MARSHALL AND DR. ALFRED STENGEL IN THE BLEACHED FLOUR TRIAL.

Dr. John Marshall: I reside at Philadelphia, and am professor of chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania, teaching general chemistry and physiological chemistry there. I received my academic and scientific education at Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg, Pa., and was graduated as doctor of medicine in the University of Pennsylvania. Subsequently I studied physiological chemistry at the University of Tuebingen, Germany, and graduated with the degree of Doctor of Natural Science. For the past thirty years I have been teaching chemistry in the Medical School of the University of Pennsylvania. I have made no special study of the subject of bleached flour, and only in a general way have become familiar with the Alsop process. My testimony is based on my general learning and knowledge of the substances referred to in the assumption of facts given me.

Assuming that the flour seized in this case was subjected to treatment by a process known as the Alsop process, which consists in the production of nitrogen peroxide gas, which, when mixed with atmospheric air was brought into contact with the flour while it was in a state of agitation, and the flour thereby became bleached or whitened to some extent, I am of opinion that such treatment added to or imparted to the flour nitric acid and nitrogen peroxide.

Nitrogen peroxide is a gaseous substance, brownish red, very irritative to the mucous membrane, and a poisonous substance. Nitric acid is a liquid capable of being volatilized, and exceedingly irritative, corrosive, and poisonous. Assuming that bread made from bleached flour contains such substances, and also nitrite reacting material, it would have added to it substances poisonous in character. The physical and chemical effect on a person taking such substances with his bread would be as follows: The nitrite contained in the bread would act upon the red coloring matter of the red corpuscles of the blood so as to change or convert the hemoglobin of the blood into a substance known as methemoglobin—a foreign body in the blood circulation. When this happens, the oxygen is so firmly fixed in combination with the hemoglobin molecule that the vital processes of the animal body are not sufficiently strong to separate the oxygen from the hemoglobin, and consequently the substance methemoglobin circulates in the blood stream as a foreign body, not as a carrier of oxygen, until finally it is destroyed by the liver. Or if the quantity produced be beyond that which the liver is able to destroy, that excess quantity may appear in the urine of the individual. The effect is to remove from the blood circulation a certain varying quantity of hemoglobin which no longer may functionate as a carrier of oxygen to the tissues for the purpose of oxidizing various substances necessary to sustain life. Therefore, an extra strain is placed upon the liver to remove this methemoglobin; and, in the case of adults, an extra strain is placed upon the red bone marrow in its production of corpuscles and hemoglobin, the oxygen carrying material, in order to replace that which has been rendered inert by the action of nitrite by having been converted into methemoglobin. The effect would be injurious to health.

More fully as to the immediate direct effect of changing the hemoglobin to methemoglobin:

In the blood stream there are red corpuscles, invisible to the naked eye, which contain a red coloring substance known as hemoglobin, when not combined with oxygen, and when combined with oxygen forming a dissociable compound, oxyhemoglobin. In respiration, the hemoglobin contained in the red corpuscles of the venous blood is brought into the lungs, where it having an affinity for the oxygen, which is one of the gaseous constituents of the air, combines with the oxygen to form oxyhemoglobin. This oxyhemoglobin contained in the red blood corpuscles is then conveyed, through the arterial system, to the various parts of the body, and, at the terminals of the arterial system, passing through a mass of tissue, it gives up its oxygen, to oxidize the tissues, or materials that may be in solution there, to form carbon dioxide, and to form water, and this oxyhemoglobin is thereby reduced to the condition of hemoglobin, which is returned by the venous system to the lungs, to be again oxygenated. That is where the hemoglobin will again combine with oxygen to form oxyhemoglobin, and a given quantity of hemoglobin may serve to carry a given quantity of oxygen to the system. Now, however, if any of this hemoglobin is converted into methemoglobin, which is a compound of oxygen with hemoglobin, in which the oxygen is more firmly combined than in the case of oxyhemoglobin, although the quantity of oxygen is the same, the oxygen is so firmly attached—combined with the hemoglobin—that the vital processes are not sufficiently strong to separate the oxygen from the hemoglobin, nor to use the oxygen to oxidize the tissue and tissue materials, to sustain life, and, consequently, it passes through the circulation to the arterial system and the venous system, and continues this cycle until, finally, it is destroyed by the liver. Therefore, a certain quantity of the hemoglobin is rendered inefficient. It no longer functionates as a carrier of oxygen to the system, serves, or acts, as a foreign body in the blood circulation, and, therefore, must be removed. As I have said before, an extra strain is placed upon the liver, in order to remove it, and an extra strain is placed upon the red blood marrow, in adults, to regenerate the corpuscles, and to replace the corpuscles of the hemoglobin that have been rendered inactive by the action of nitrite, and the formation of methemoglobin.

In my opinion, the nitrite in the flour seized, and the bread made from it will work this change in the hemoglobin. The extent of such action undoubtedly varies with the amount taken into the system—the difference between a deadly dose and a minute one is only one of degree. In other words, the degree of injury depends on the amount present. Health may be impaired by the taking of such nitrite in bread without the appearance of any observable symptom of impairment of well-being; the injury may not be observable by the instruments which are employed for making such diagnoses, and assuming that bread containing nitrites in minute amounts be regularly eaten, substantial injury to health may result, without the presence of any particular symptom. So far as the blood is concerned, the chemical action would occur without the acquisition of any tolerance on the part of the body, whether the quantity were large or small.

Assuming it to be the fact that nitrites are found in saliva, my opinion as to injuriousness is not changed. Nitrites, from different sources, have the same action. Although present in saliva, they are not normal to it, and are found there because of bacterial action, by means of which nitrates are reduced to nitrites. In my opinion, nitrates or nitro compounds are formed in flour by bleaching. It is also true that in the intestines the action of bacteria may reduce nitrates to nitrites. Nitrites, in my opinion, are not normal constituents of sound vegetables, nor are they of meats free from any stage of decomposition. When present in such articles, nitrates have been reduced to nitrites by putrefactive processes. Nitrites may be produced in ham by the process of curing.

When the bleaching medium has been applied to the flour for a relatively long time, and has turned it yellow, the action of nitric acid upon the gluten has produced a nitro compound called xantho-protein. This substance is poisonous, its effect being the same that one would observe from the action of nitrites. It contains NO_2 groups and forms in digestion nitro-albumose and nitro-peptone, which are reduced to nitrites, and thereupon form methemoglobin. Flour bleached merely enough to whiten it would contain a less quantity of nitrite material than flour bleached until it had become yellow, and, therefore, in the case of flour bleached only to whiteness, the action of the nitrites would be less because of the lesser quantity of nitrite material in it, whereas in the case of flour bleached to yellowness, the quantity of nitrite or nitro material would be larger, and consequently the action greater. It would be the same poison, differing only in amount.

Ten or 12 grains of sodium nitrite might be a fatal dose. Much would depend on the individual, however. A medicinal dose is from 1 to 3 grains. The action of 3 or 4 grains taken in the course of ten hours could be determined in the blood by means of the spectroscope. I have never seen a person suffering from poisoning from nitrites taken either in food or drink.

Corn starch which is alkaline in character takes up nitrates from the air. If, however, it is not alkaline, but acid in character, it will not take up nitrites from the air. Flour is acid. Nitrites, whether present in the saliva, in cured meats, or in water, are all the same, and their chemical action is as certain as the law of gravity. As of many other substances, it may be said of nitrites, that their effects are injurious, although no symptoms may be observable.—Dr. John Marshall.

Dr. Alfred Stengel: I reside at Philadelphia, Pa. I graduated from the Medical School of the University of Pennsylvania in 1889. Since that time I have been connected with the various hospitals of Philadelphia as pathologist and physician. For several years I was pathologist to the German Hospital and the Philadelphia Hospital, and for the last fifteen years I have been physician to several of the hospitals in Philadelphia, including the Howard Hospital, the Philadelphia Hospital, the Pennsylvania Hospital, the Children's Hospital, and the University Hospital. In my earlier years I made special studies in pathology and published a text-book on that subject. I have been since 1898 professor of clinical medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, and was for a time connected with the Woman's Medical College in a similar capacity. I have been a contributor of articles on pathological subjects and on medical subjects; I was general editor of Millenockle's Encyclopedia of Medicine, translated from the German and published in English. For a time I was editor of the American Journal of Medical Science, and I have been connected with the various associations, including the Association of American Physicians, the American Medical Association, the Society of Pathologists and Bacteriologists, and a number of other local medical organizations. I am engaged in the practice and teaching of my profession in Philadelphia.

The flour treated by the Alsop process, assuming that it gives the reaction for nitrite reacting material on being treated by the Griess test, has had added to it nitrous and nitric acids, both of which are poisonous and deleterious substances. Assuming that bread made from such flour contains nitrite reacting material, as shown by the Griess test, I think the consumption of such bread would be injurious to health. Its injurious effect would depend on the quantity of nitrite reacting substances present in the flour or in the bread. If present in very large quantity, the flour or bread would be decidedly injurious; if present in very small quantity, a longer time might be required for the manifestation of any injurious effects, and they might not be obvious immediately after, or even some time after, consuming the material. Nitrites have a decidedly injurious effect on the blood, so altering it that it becomes incapable to the extent to which it is altered of carrying on its proper functions. If an overwhelming dose of nitrites were taken, the change in the blood, together with other changes, might be rapidly destructive of life. In very small quantity, the effect would, of course, be proportionally less.

Nitrites change hemoglobin, as it is called, so that it is no longer capable of carrying oxygen; that is, render it incapable of carrying on the important function of the blood which enables us to breathe in air, exhale carbonic acid gas, and go on living. Second, nitrites are also powerful depressants of the circulation, lower the blood pressure, and injure the health by interfering with proper circulation. Third, nitrites destructively affect the walls of the blood vessels, the walls of the heart, and the muscular tissue generally. Fourth, their effect upon digestion is injurious in the possibility of irritating the stomach and intestinal tract and interfering with digestive processes. These are the four ways in which nitrites, in quantities sufficient to make their effects manifest, influence the body to the disadvantage of health. In minimum quantities beyond the reach of chemical detection, the effects would be correspondingly diminished, but I believe that nitrites in any quantity act in the same ways and are deleterious. The necessity or inevitable tendency of eating bread containing nitrite reacting material made from the flour seized would be to the detriment of health.

The human system develops no tolerance and has no defense against this particular kind of poison. There are certain substances against which the human body has some means of defense—well known detoxicating mechanisms. But in the case of nitrites, there is no mechanism of that kind.

Nitrites found in the air, in vegetables, and in smoked meats, if they are so found, and in saliva, are poisonous, and if ingested into the stomach would have the same effect as nitrites from any other source. The assumption that the effects of eating this bleached flour bread may not be observable by the most skillful diagnostician, not manifesting themselves by symptoms or illness or anything of that kind, would not alter my view that the nitrite reacting material in this bread is injurious to health, for the reason that if quantities of nitrites infinitesimally small are taken into the body, it is not to be expected that effects are going to be manifest like the effects of large quantities. Take, for example, a person who lives in a room which is covered with green wall paper, containing arsenic. He might not show any immediate effect of the arsenical poison, but, after a long period of time, might grow unaccountably ill, and the effects be produced by the daily inhalation of a little arsenic. Just so, in the case of nitrites, it is known with certainty that injurious effects follow the eating of bread containing nitrites, because the nitrite bodies are poisonous and have a certain definite chemical effect upon the system. There is no mechanism by which that effect can be avoided. If they are there in such small quantities that after each digestion no effect can be seen, the addition of one does after another will bring about deleterious effects. So that, although the effects of minute quantities may not be demonstrable by experiments, I am still of the opinion that the nitrites are injurious. It might take years to bring about the ill effects. It would be impossible to conduct an experiment and keep a human being or animal under certain conditions for that length of time, in order to prove that these ill effects occur. In the absence of experimental proof that very poisonous substances are injurious to health, and produce poisonous results in the specific instance, it is well recognized in medicine, that the fact that a substance is a poison and has certain definitely known poisonous injurious effects, is in itself sufficient to bar that substance from the daily use as a food, or the frequent use in any way, even in small quantities, unless it be known that there are defensive mechanisms or ways that the body has of protecting itself against small quantities.

A deleterious food product would be one capable of damaging the health of an individual. A poison is a substance which, when taken into the system, causes damage to the individual. There are some substances, such as benzoic acid, which if taken in sufficient concentration, would produce injury, but which in small amounts may not be injurious. So of acetic acid. Nature has a way of defending itself against a certain amount of hydrochloric acid. Benzoic acid is found in cranberries; acetic acid in apple cider. Nicotine, however, is not like these, but is always harmful, irrespective of the amount. So far as the nitrites in the air are concerned, they are not absorbed when taken into the lungs in anything like the quantity taken into the stomach would be absorbed.

In my practice, I have never seen anyone in whom I could recognize symptoms that I could attribute to nitrite poisoning from food. I don't think it is known just how much nitrites would have to be taken into the system in order that their presence might be noticed in the color of the blood. The use of the spectroscope is a matter requiring considerable expert ability. If in ten hours an average individual, from 30 to 40 years of age, weighing 140 pounds, and in good health, should take into his system 8 or 9 grains of sodium nitrite, I should expect to find methemoglobin in his blood spectrum, but not certainly, because some persons can stand an enormous dose of poison.

My conclusion that a person eating that bread might have the hemoglobin of his blood converted into methemoglobin is not based upon any actual observation or actual knowledge, but on the reasoning that effect must follow cause.—Dr. Alfred Stengel.

April 8, 1919.

Mr. James Foust,
Dairy and Food Commissioner,
Department of Agriculture,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:

In reply to your letter of April 3 concerning bleached flour, I beg to enclose herewith photostat copies of the attitude of the several States on this subject as compiled and published in the Miller's Almanac of 1916-17. I presume the statements made herein are authentic.

I am sorry there is an effort in your State to change the law on this subject. This Department has not changed its opinion on this subject. We have for several years been carrying on investigations on bleached flour with the view of trying another case. You have our Food Inspection Decision 100, I presume, but I am enclosing herewith a copy of it which still represents the views of this Department.

I have been away several days, hence the delay in answering your letter.

Respectfully,

J. S. ABBOTT,

United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Chemistry,

Office of Co-operation.

April 10, 1919.

Mr. James Foust,
Dairy and Food Commissioner,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:

I have just received your letter of April 9 with the enclosed bill that has been introduced in your legislature on the bleaching of flour. I do not know of any electric process for the bleaching of flour except the Alsop process. There is a process for bleaching flour with chlorin gas. This gas is liquefied and handled in drums from which the chlorin passes as a gas after the pressure has been removed from the liquid chlorin into the flour at some stage of its passage through the mill. This chlorin is not obtained by an electric process; it is obtained by a chemical process.

I have heard of an electric process by which an electric current passes through nitric acid, decomposes the nitric acid, liberating nitrous oxid, which is carried to the flour and bleaches it just as the nitrous oxid does in the Alsop process. I do not know to what extent this process is used and I do not know whether it is controlled by the Alsop people.

The wording of the bill which you sent me looks like the people controlling the electrical process are attempting to get a monopoly of flour bleaching in your State. I would like to know what the people there think of it and especially what you think of this phase of it.

As to the harmfulness of nitrous oxid, I beg to say that I do not know whether the amount of this substance in flour that has been bleached with it is in sufficient quantity to be designated injurious to health. It is common knowledge, however, among chemists that nitrous oxid is a poisonous substance. You have the testimony of the experts in the case we tried in Kansas City in which this Bureau held it to be deleterious to health as found in flour bleached with it. I shall endeavor to get an opinion for you from the Bureau on this point.

Respectfully,

J. S. ABBOTT,
Chemist in Charge.

FOOD INSPECTION DECISION 100.

United States Department of Agriculture, Office of the Secretary, Board of Food and Drug Inspection.

BLEACHED FLOUR.

Flour bleached with nitrogen peroxide, as affected by the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, has been made the subject of a careful investigation extending over several months.

A public hearing on this subject was held by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, beginning November 18, 1908, and continuing five days. At this hearing those who favored the bleaching process and those who opposed it were given equal opportunities to be heard.

It is my opinion, based upon all the testimony given at the hearing, upon the reports of those who have investigated the subject, upon the literature, and upon the unanimous opinion of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, that flour bleached by nitrogen peroxide is an adulterated product under the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906; that the character of the adulteration is such that no statement upon the label will bring bleached flour within the law; and that such flour can not legally be made or sold in the District of Columbia or in the Territories; or be transported or sold in interstate commerce; or be transported or sold in foreign commerce except under that portion of section 2 of the law which reads:

* * * PROVIDED, That no article shall be deemed misbranded or adulterated within the provisions of this act when intended for export to any foreign country and prepared or packed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser, when no substance is used in the preparation or packing thereof in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which said article is intended to be shipped; * * *

In view of the extent of the bleaching process and of the immense quantity of bleached flour now on hand or in process of manufacture, no prosecutions will be recommended by this Department for manufacture and sale thereof in the District of Columbia or the Territories or for transportation or sale in interstate or foreign commerce, for a period of six months from the date hereof.

Secretary of Agriculture.

DR. ALSBERG'S LETTER.

United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Chemistry,
Washington, D. C.

April 15, 1919.

Hon. James Foust,
Dairy and Food Commissioner,
Department of Agriculture,
Harrisburg, Pa.

My dear Mr. Foust:

Your letter of April 9th to Mr. Abbott has been turned over to me. I do not know of any electric process for treating flour, other than the Alsop process, but we have not searched the patent literature bearing on this subject, of recent years, and it is possible that some process of which I do not know has recently been invented. We do not see that there is any good reason for making any distinction between the electric bleaching of flour and the chemical bleaching of flour. As you well know, the electric bleaching of flour by the Alsop process is in fact a chemical process. The bleaching is not done directly by the action of the electricity but is done by a chemical, nitrous dioxide, which is generated from the nitrogen and oxygen of the air by the electric current. The principle involved is the same as that by which nitric acid is manufactured in Norway and in other places where the electricity is cheap. One could accomplish the same thing without the use of electricity at all if one mixed under suitable conditions nitrous dioxide with flour. The bleaching of flour by chlorine is an analogous case. In this process, chlorine gas is generated by electricity from salt solution at Niagara Falls, and other places where electric power is cheap, and stored up in cylinders to be shipped to the mill. There doesn't seem to be any essential difference in the final result between generating the bleaching gas in the mill or generating it by electricity in a chemical plant and shipping it to the mill.

With reference to the evidence that the bleaching of flour renders it injurious to health, much as I would welcome the bringing forth of such evidence, since I believe the whole practice to be contrary to the public interest, I must confess that all the evidence that I have seen is not adequate in my judgment to convince a court that such flour actually is deleterious to health or at any rate sufficiently adequate to successfully maintain a prosecution on this charge alone in court. I have not recently reviewed the testimony of Dr. Shepard, Dr. Marshall or Dr. Stengel. My recollection is that they held that nitrites were quite toxic substances and that, therefore, their addition to food products was undesirable and might render the article deleterious to health. I do not recall that they testified that the small quantity of nitrites present in bleached flour had actually been proved to render that flour deleterious to health. Their argument, as I recall it, was that, if a considerable quantity of the substance was deleterious to health, a small quantity probably was. As you will recall, such testimony was regarded as adequate by the lower court, as evidenced by the court's instructions to the jury that the question of degree was not in issue. You will also recall that the Supreme Court held otherwise. Be all that as it may, the fact remains that this Bureau believes that the practice of bleaching flour makes it possible to give to a commercially inferior flour the appearance of a commercially superior one. This is the basis upon which the practice must be controlled under existing Federal legislation.

Very truly yours,

C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

BLEACHING FLOUR UNLAWFUL.

The recent decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the bleached flour case has no bearing whatever upon the Pennsylvania food law or upon its enforcement. This statement is made here and now to the end that the trade may be fully advised as to the exact fact. A similar statement was issued through the public press about the time the decision of the federal court was handed down. The decree of the court was based upon the following language of the federal law.

"If it contains any added poisonous or other added deleterious ingredient which may render such article injurious to health."

There is a vital difference between the federal act and our State law. The Commonwealth is not under the necessity of proving that the presence of the forbidden ingredients will injure the consumer. An examination of the Pennsylvania act will show that the legislature has specifically prohibited the addition of nitrous acid or nitrites in all articles of food. Of course this includes flour. And under the specific language of the act, the Commonwealth is left but one course to pursue, and that is to prosecute all manufacturers or dealers who manufacture or sell flour in Pennsylvania which contains nitrous acid or nitrites.

The Food Bureau wishes to state as emphatically as possible that careful investigation will be made in every section of the Commonwealth and prosecution will be promptly ordered in every case wherein the law has been violated.

It is stated that some manufacturers of flour are using chlorine for bleaching purposes. This can not be lawfully done under the general provisions of the Pennsylvania law which declares "or other added ingredient deleterious to health." This language differs very materially from the federal law and the supreme court of Pennsylvania has decided in the Kevin case, that if the added substance is injurious to health in any quantity it cannot be used so that the question of quantity is immaterial.

It is hoped this statement is sufficiently informing to prevent trouble to manufacturers or dealers. It is made for that purpose.

CIDER VINEGAR.

The Following Correspondence Regarding Cider Vinegar is Printed for the Information it Contains.

Department of Agriculture, Harrisburg, Pa. Gentlemen:

I dislike very much to trouble you, but I have four or five barrels of apple vinegar stored in my tool house at my residence in Swatara, Dauphin Co., Pa. I am located on the north side of the railroad, about a square from the Swatara Station.

This supposed-to-be vinegar was made from the apples taken from the orchard during the season of 1917, and it has not cured for vinegar purposes. I am unable to understand the reason for same, and wish to ask if you have anyone who could make an examination of the contents of the barrels, and advise me what is the trouble, the cause for same, and also the remedy, if there is one. In its present condition it is almost valueless.

I would appreciate very much any information you could give me that would assist me in the matter. If this does not belong to your Department, will you be kind enough to pass it over to the proper party for attention.

Thanking you in advance, and with kindest regards, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir:

Hon. James Foust, Chief of the Food Bureau of the State Department of Agriculture, referred to me on the 3rd inst. your letter of the 2nd relative to the defects of certain vinegar. Absence on public service has prevented my more prompt attention to this query.

You say very little about the condition under which the cider stock was kept to change it into vinegar. A defect in any one of a number of conditions necessary to make a satisfactory vinegar product by the cask process might account for the present condition. In the first place, the acid of the vinegar comes not from the acid of the apple, but from its sugars. If the sugar supply were insufficient, you could not make a strong vinegar from the cider. As the first transformation in the changing process by which sugar is transformed into acetic acid comes the alcoholic fermentation of the cider. This progresses best in warm weather. It is rarely necessary to add any yeast, because the wild yeast present on the outside of the apples is commonly vigorous and abundant enough to affect a prompt conversion of the cider sugars within a few days after the pressing. This process requires very little access to air.

Then follows the conversion of alcohol into acetic acid. This change is affected by means of bacterial ferment known as the vinegar ferment, which appears, in certain stages of development, in the coalesced form of vinegar. There are three conditions any defect in which may prevent a satisfactory vinegar fermentation: First, there may not be air enough. The vinegar ferment has a large requirement of air or oxygen. The barrels should not be more than one-half to two-thirds full and should be kept on their sides so that there shall be a large surface of the liquid exposed to the air. The vinegar ferment does not require for its most satisfactory activity quite as high a temperature as the yeast requires. If the temperature is too high other ferments that are probably present may gain the mastery and the acetic acid product be relatively small. Second, if the stock is allowed to freeze, the vinegar ferment may be killed or at least may become very inactive, so that after the freezing and thawing little change may occur. For these reasons it is better to store the vinegar in the cask process of manufacture in a cellar having a temperature of 50 to 60° Fahr. or thereabouts. A temperature as high as 70° Fahr. may not be injurious, but often is followed by a greater rate of activity of vinegar ferment; but, as I have above stated, it is often more liable to increase undesirable ferments, especially if the vinegar is kept long under such conditions. Third, you will not get the acetic fermentation unless the acetic ferment is present in vigorous state. This ferment is widely distributed, is found abundantly in old vinegar cellars, and usually in old vinegar barrels that have not been sterilized before refilling. But if new barrels are used and the storage is in a place where vinegar has not been previously made and stored, it is better to ensure the success of the process by adding some mother of vinegar from good vinegar stock to the cider after the alcohol fermentation is about completed. I prefer not to add it earlier, because if the acid develops too fast it tends to weaken the yeast action.

There is still another consideration: Often strong vinegar may be weakened or destroyed by the action of undesirable organisms. There are bacteria that consume acetic acid. They commonly get into the vinegar by the agency of vinegar flies to whose invasion also the vinegar eel is due. To prevent such invasion it is well to fill the bung-hole of the vinegar barrel with a not too greatly compressed wad of cotton.

I have thus stated the unfavorable conditions, one or more of which may account for the present condition of your cider stock, in order that with your own knowledge of the facts you may be in position to determine the cause of the present unsatisfactory advancement of your vinegar and to correct it without the need of going to the trouble of taking a representative sample and forwarding it here. If, however, you still feel that such analysis would be desirable, I will be pleased to examine the sample for the purpose you mention. Send not less than a quart in a closed container and address to Department of Experimental Agricultural Chemistry, State College, Pa. Also write your name and address on the outside of the package so as to make prompt identification possible, and at the same time please send me as full a statement as you can of the conditions of the apples that were pressed for making the cider and the conditions under which the cider has been kept.

Yours very truly,

WM. FREAR.

THE LATE H. J. HEINZ.

There died in Pittsburgh on May 14th a canner who had built up in fifty years an all-year round business, whose output requires the services of 400 salesmen to dispose of it, and yet when H. J. Heinz started in business he delivered the goods he manufactured from a market basket carried on the arm.

His parents wanted him to enter the ministry. But the four-acre garden patch which the family had in cultivation brought out the fact that his ambition lay in another direction. He wanted to dispose of the surplus that the garden produced. So well did the patch thrive under his management that the second season's yield brought him in $2,400. To bring $600.00 out of an acre of ground in those days was not only a feat in agriculture, but above all a feat in selling. So well did the gardening go that the boy decided to manufacture one of his own raw products into a finished article of commerce. Hence he started to bottle horse radish. This was the first of the famous "57 Varieties." At the very start, Mr. Heinz tried to give distinction to the product by dressing it in a new way. He realized that it is much easier to sell an article that possesses something that is peculiar to itself.

He was strong for service, for the individual note in advertising and for maintenance of quality in output. He had undivided faith in his output and his ability to sell it, knowing that advertising would find a market for everything that has merit.

Mr. Heinz helped as much as any one man in developing the taste of the American public for high grade Canned Foods. We shall suffer a loss in the death of such leaders, but they blazed the trail and it is up to us to make the trail a broad highway leading to all nations everywhere.—Cannery Notes, July, 1919.

HE GOT THE JOB.

Ex-Soldier answering advertisement for cook; "I'd like to apply for the job, sir."

Hotel Man: "What can you cook?"

Ex-Soldier: "Anything, sir—I used to cook in the Army."

Hotel Man: "Well, how do you make hash?"

Ex-Soldier: "You don't make it; it just accumulates."

I'D RATHER GO FISHING.

I'd rather go fishing than be a King,
For the life of a monarch's a troubled thing—
He looses his throne on rebellion's tide,
When traitors along with his soldiers ride,
And he never knows when the slip of a knife
May end all his troubles along with his life.
Oh, a monarch's a terribly troubled thing,
And I'd rather go fishing than be a King!
I'd rather go fishing than anything—
Than rolling in money or being a King;
For out where the water is full of fish,
There's nothing on earth that a chap could wish!
No joy quite compares with the joy of a hike
To the river or lake for the feel of a strike—
As for rolling in money or being a King,
I'd rather go fishing than anything!—Southern Homeseeker.

TRADE ORGANIZATIONS

In Connection With Foods Furnished the People for Human Consumption.

Food control officials, both state and national, as well as the people of this country, are under many obligations to the National Canners Association, The Specialty Manufacturers Association, The National Confectioners Association, The National Ice Cream Manufacturers Association and the National Wholesale Grocers Association for the splendid work they are doing in improving the products manufactured or prepared and placed on the market for sale.

Years ago there was considerable prejudice against canned goods. It has all been eliminated due to the National Canners Association, which is made up of high-class representative business men, who use the best materials, the most sanitary methods, the best tin obtainable for canning their products.

The National Canners Association have some of the best chemists in the country, and watch every phase of production. Even the tin used in making cans is analyzed at their laboratories, and with the assistance of the joint committee on definitions and standards together with the co-operation of the United States Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, canned products are more free from danger of contamination and impurities than canned goods put up in the homes years ago. This is also true of the National Specialty Manufacturers Association. They use the best raw materials obtainable; the most modern equipment in their plants, and products are labeled conveying their true character. Most of their products are in package form—some bulk goods. The same condition exists with the National Confectioners Association. Raw materials are carefully safeguarded and great care exercised in the preparation of candies usually consumed by children.

The National Wholesale Grocers Association has rendered valuable assistance to food control officials in compelling manufacturers to prepare their products in accordance with the laws of the various states, as well as the National Food and Drug Act.

The Wholesale Grocers Association protects not only the consuming public but the retail merchants, who are not as well informed as to the requirements of the various laws as are the wholesale grocers.

With these kindred organizations, and the public press, more has been accomplished than with the enforcement of the laws.

FOOD PRODUCTION AT THE PRESENT TIME COMPARED WITH FIFTY YEARS AGO.

Fifty years ago, the population of the United States was 31,443,322. Today it is approximately 100,000,000. Fifty years ago four-fifths of the homes produced their own food. They had large gardens, raised their food in the summer for consumption in the winter. Cabbage and potatoes would be buried in some cases, in others placed in cellars. Fruits and vegetables would be canned in the homes, as well as jellies, jams, preserves and the like. Each family would raise their own pork. Butchering around Thanksgiving was going on nearly everywhere. Many of the homes kept cows, and those which did not have were supplied with milk by those who did have.

The grocery store fifty years ago was a small institution handling coffee, tea, spices, extracts, which constituted the usual stock. To-day the whole system has been changed. The manufacture and preparation of foods, including fruits and vegetables, has been transferred from the home to the factory. Few homes do any canning; less put up preserves, jellies and jams. The raising of pork is a thing of the past. The ringing of the bell of the kind faced cow has disappeared in our cities, towns and villages, due to health regulations. The grocery store has ceased to be a small institution and is now on every corner doing an enormous business, handling practically everything necessary from the meal in the home of the poor to the banquet halls of the rich. This change of conditions has naturally added much to the cost of living. The consuming public must pay for the large factories and plants which have taken the place of the home production of foods. This is also true of the delivery system of the large grocery stores, telephones and the like, all add to the cost of living. With the increase in population from thirty-one million people to one hundred million in fifty years, such wonderful changes should be expected.

WATER SOLD AT 90 CENTS A POUND.

Department of Agriculture Warns Manufacturers that Butter Containing Excess Fluid is Liable to Seizure.

Washington, D. C.—Several shipments of butter have been seized recently under the Federal Food and Drugs Act on the charge that the butter contained too much water or salt and too little milk fat, according to the officials of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, who are charged with the enforcement of that act. The sale of water and salt at the price of butter is not only a fraud upon the consumer and an unnecessary burden in these times of high prices, but is demoralizing to the butter industry, the officials claim.

The standard for butter which is used as a guide by the Federal and most of the State and city food officials requires that butter shall contain not less than 82.5 per cent. milk fat. This leaves 17.5 per cent. for salts, coloring matter and moisture. On the average something less than 16 per cent. will represent moisture. Butter that contains appreciable quantities of water above 16 per cent. contains excess water and necessarily has less milk fat than the standard requires.

The Federal officials do not recommend seizure when the butter contains as much as 80 per cent. milk fat and is otherwise in accordance with the law. All the butter that has been seized under the Federal Food and Drug Act contained less than 80 per cent. milk fat, and a proportionately high percentage of water.

HURTS HONEST MANUFACTURERS.

The adulteration by a comparatively few manufacturers of such high priced food as butter with water, which costs them nothing, places the great body of honest manufacturers at a disadvantage in competing in price to the wholesale trade. The man who puts excess water in his butter can cut the price to the dealer sufficiently to get the business and still make more than a fair profit. The cut price, however, seldom reaches the consumer, since the additional water is not apparent and the butter usually is sold for the regular market price. The manufacturer and the dealer thus divide between them the profit on water sold at from 50 to 90 cents a pound, which on the whole is quite profitable. The dealer does not always know that the butter contains too much water and too little butter fat. He quite naturally prefers to buy butter that appears to be good and which is offered to him at a few cents lower than he can buy it elsewhere, since he can sell it for the full market price.

Excess water in butter results usually either from lack of care and facilities for controlling it, or from a deliberate intention to put in as much water as the traffic will bear. In either case the consumer pays butter prices for the added water.

OFFICIAL STANDARD FOR BUTTER.

The test of the official standard for butter follows: "Butter is the clean, nonrancid product made by gathering in any manner the fat of fresh or ripened milk or cream into a mass, which also contains a small portion of the other milk constituents, with or without salt, and contains not less than eighty-two and five-tenths per cent. (82.5%) of milk fat. By acts of Congress approved August 2, 1886, and May 9, 1902, butter may also contain added coloring matter."

Butter shipped within the jurisdiction of the Federal Food and Drugs Act and containing too much water and too little milk fat is liable to seizure.

A VICIOUS MEASURE.

(Editorial From the Altoona Tribune.)

Senator Calder, of New York, has introduced a measure in the Senate of the United States which is meant to benefit the makers of fraudulent food products by largely increasing federal authority and making the food laws of the several states subordinate to the national government. We do not at this moment accuse Senator Calder of guilty knowledge or of complicity with manufacturers whose principle is doubtful, but whatever his motive that will be the inevitable result should Congress enact and the President approve the Senator's bill.

We do not have a copy of the measure and our observations are based upon the investigations of a citizen interested in the continued purity of the food products sold to the people of the country, and especially of Pennsylvania. But we understand that it provides that goods in bottles or other original packages, shipped under interstate commerce regulations, shall be considered as still in the original packages until after they have passed from the shelves of the retailer into the hands of the consumer. Under the provisions of the bill the vender could not be prosecuted for selling misbranded or adulterated goods nor could the manufacturer.

This bill proposes to authorize and command wanton and inexcusable invasion of the reserved rights of the states by the federal government. Mr. Calder may believe he is proposing a just and a righteous thing when he undertakes to give the federal food and drugs act jurisdiction in every state of the union. He may have been moved by complaints from certain conscienceless manufacturers of inferior or fraudulent food products on the ground that it is a tremendous burden upon the manufacturer to be harassed by forty-eight state food laws in addition to the federal act, and it is a very plausible argument. But it would prove detrimental to the best interests of the consumer.

We have an excellent body of food laws in Pennsylvania. The food and drugs act of the United States government is far inferior to ours. The comprehensiveness of our laws, coupled with their rigid but common sense enforcement, has relieved the people of this commonwealth, to a very considerable extent, from the adulterated and misbranded and wholly fictitious products which still have a considerable sale in several of our sister states. If the Calder bill were to become a law Pennsylvania would be powerless against fraudulent preparations on the market. Take as an example the various preparations in which the word "egg" is freely used for the purpose of deceiving housewives into the belief that they are egg substitutes. These glaring frauds are excluded from Pennsylvania as is bleached flour and other unhealthy or even dangerous preparations.

The "Tribune" directs the attention of Senators Penrose and Knox, as well as the representatives of this commonwealth in the national house of representatives, to this dangerous and vicious attempt to make the national government the partner of men who are striving to get rich by deceiving the consumers of the country. We hope the bill will never get out of the Senate. We are confident that Pennsylvania's senators, both of whom are acquainted with the quality and the efficiency of our State food laws, will do what they can to show the real intent of the Calder bill and to prevent its passage by the Senate. Such legislation is directly antagonistic to the welfare of the consumer and is neither asked nor needed by reputable and conscientious manufacturers of food products.

OLIVES AND BOTULINUS POISONING.

The olive investigation, the results of which are reported elsewhere, was one of the most complete and thorough undertakings ever accomplished in the matter of dealing with any one food commodity by the authorities of Pennsylvania or, for that matter, of any other state.

This investigation was deemed necessary after a conference between Dr. Edward Martin, State Commissioner of Health, Hon. Fred Rasmussen, Secretary of Agriculture, and Director James Foust, of the Bureau of Foods. It originated in the fact that seven persons residing in Canton, Ohio, and five who lived in Detroit, Michigan, died from botulinus poisoning soon after eating ripe olives. The two departments felt that it was their imperative duty to use every care and precaution to safeguard the health of the people of Pennsylvania. Hence the investigation.

Fifteen special agents were put to work promptly to collect samples. Their part of the work was completed in a week, 254 samples having been collected. These were gathered in forty-six different cities and towns. All sections of the commonwealth were covered. These olives consisted of seventy-one different brands, representing 100 styles and sizes. They were turned over to two experts who, with their assistants, completed the work in one month. The chemists employed were Dr. Randle C. Rosenberger, bacteriologist, Jefferson Medical college, holding the same position with the Philadelphia General hospital, and Dr. Charles H. LaWall, dean of the College of Pharmacy, Philadelphia, and chemist of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

Botulinus poisoning was first detected in Germany. It was found first in sausage, again in smoked ham and next in string beans. We understand that so far as European records show there are but three distinct instances of this virulent poison developing—two in meat and one in vegetables. Several cases have been discovered in the United States in recent years, causing sickness and, in some instances, death. All the earlier cases occurred in California. The poison developed in string beans, asparagus and a couple of other vegetables and fruits. Quite recently, as has been related, the botulinus poison caused the death of seven persons in Canton, Ohio, and five in Detroit. Still latter, five cases were discovered in New York, all of which proved fatal. It has been established by ample testimony that all these fatalities followed speedily upon the eating of ripe olives.

It is proper to say at this point that bacillus botulinus (or other disease producing organism) was never detected in green olives. The only ones affected was rip olives and usually soft to the touch. They emit a strong and repulsive odor. Fruits and vegetables have never developed botulinus poisoning after being cooked. Do not stop eating olives. But do take precautions. There are more deaths in Pennsylvania in a day from automobile accidents than have ever occurred from eating infected olives.

It must be conceded, however that more and more botulinus poisoning comes to light with the passage of time. Not that there really is more, but that the constant advance of scientific knowledge is bringing to light secrets that were hidden even from medical skill in the earlier days. In fact, it is now contended by several specialists that many sudden deaths ascribed to acute indigestion were really caused by this powerful and apparently remedyless poison.

Because of the virulence of botulinus poisoning the Bulletin imagines that scientists should devote a great deal of attention to it and to the possibilities of robbing it of its present awful power. We know that it is due to the decomposition of meats, vegetables and fruits. So far as ripe olives are concerned, we believe that if they are put up in an 8 or 9 per cent. salt solution botulinus will not develop and could not live.

REPORT OF THE CHEMISTS ON RIPE OLIVES.

The embargo placed on December 4th upon the sale and distribution of ripe olives by the State Department of Health and the State Bureau of Food Sontrol, has been lifted after a complete and satisfactory report from Charles H. LaWall and Randle C. Rosenberger, chemists retained by the State Department.

Deaths in Detroit, Michigan and Canton, Ohio, alleged to have been caused by the eating of ripe olives in those cities, lead the Director of the Bureau of Foods and the Commissioner of Health, to take this somewhat drastic action in order to protect the health of the people of Pennsylvania. In Detroit five people died after having eaten of the olives and in Canton there were seven.

The report of the chemists, which is herewith made public follows:—

"The investigation of the quality of the ripe olives as sold upon the Pennsylvania Market which we have been making under your direction during the past month, has been completed.

Two hundred and fifty-four samples have been examined representing seventy-one different brands and one hundred styles and sizes. Of these samples thirty-nine were of the "Supreme" brand put up by the Curtis Olive Corporation of Los Angeles, California.

The investigation included a thorough comprehensive series of chemical tests for adulterants and preservatives, including boric, benzoic and salicylic acids, formaldehyde and also for alkaloidal poisons. Nothing abnormal chemically was detected in any of the samples.

Most of the samples were in cans and jars and all of these were in perfect condition as regards their preservation. There were no swelled buckles or leaky containers, although some of the packages were dirty and shopworn. None of the samples possessed any offensive, putrefactive or decomposition odor and in the majority of cases the flavor was good, some few being insipid. The consistency and color were both variable, probably due to different stages of ripeness and to the treatment before being packed.

From the chemical and bacteriological examinations and the results of animal inoculations it can be safely said that none of the olives submitted contained anything poisonous or harmful. The bacillus botulinus (or other disease producing organism) was not found, nor were any of the samples found to be adulterated in any manner whatever.

If ripe olives were likely to cause botulism there was abundant opportunity among the laboratory workers for the disease to develop, for, supplementing the preliminary tests, they were eaten freely throughout the work with no untoward results.

In our opinion, the chances of such poisoning are so extremely remote that the olive consuming public who favor the ripe variety may resume their diet with a feeling of perfect security."

Very truly yours,

(Signed) Charles H. LaWall, Dean,
Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, Phila.

(Signed) Randle C. Rosenberger, Bacteriologist,
Philadelphia General Hospital.

The chemical and bacteriological examinations show that there was nothing found in the 254 samples, representing seventy-one different brands, that would warrant the contention that the samples were unsafe for human consumption.

REPORT OF THE STUDY OF RIPE OLIVES.

The Specimens Being Obtained from the Dairy and Food Department of the State of Pennsylvania.

BY DR. RANDLE C. ROSENBERGER.

All specimens of olives examined were in perfect condition regarding canning. There were no swelled cans, no buckled or leaky cans; and those in jars and bottles presented no leaks whatsoever. Some of the cans, however, were dirty and shop-worn. There was never any offensive, putrefying or decomposing odor, and in the majority of cases the flavor was good, though in a few an insipid taste was noted. The consistency of the fruit was extremely variable, as was the color. The color varied, yellowish green, and dark green to a reddish purple, and a number of cans contained olives of all colors described.

When placed in a mortar and crushed with a pestle, there was some so ripe (?) or intensively treated chemically, that the pulp was immediately reduced to a paste, the pit being expressed at once. In others, quite a great deal of pressure was needed to even crush the pulp and the pit was never removed cleanly. Taking the olive between the fingers and thumb and pressing in the longitudinal axis, and exerting gentle pressure, was all that was necessary to make the pit fly out in some specimens and crush the pulp. In twenty-two specimens this pasty condition was noted. In other lots of fruit, no amount of pressure between the fingers and thumb could crush the olive or expel the pit.

Thus it can be seen that even in the same cans several degrees of ripeness or chemically treated olives were present, especially in the small variety. In three instances an actual blemish was seen upon the fruit, and in these specimens almost every olive in the can was marked with small white specks, resembling insect bites, about the size of pin heads. Removing several of these small spots there was observed, upon microscopical examination, numerous bacteria, resembling in morphology and staining characteristics B. proteus. When these olives were squeezed, a jet of fluid squirted from these little specks.

In two specimens, "Grecian ripe olives," the fruit was of a reddish purple color, showed longitudinal fissures (cuts), and the pulp was extremely soft, yet the pit was adherent. The olives that were collected in bulk, when they were allowed to stand in the bottles for a day or two after examination, soon became covered with mold fungi. When first purchased, they were moist, showing that they had been covered with liquor when offered for sale. One or two samples presented fruit with part of the skin peeling off, and were distinctly sour to the taste.

If ripe olives would cause botulism, there was abundant opportunity for the disease to be brought about, as there were three of us working upon the specimens, and we ate at least twelve to twenty olives a morning on ten different occasions. On one occasion, seven people ate at least one quart of the olives in the course of two hours and no untoward symptoms resulted.

Regarding the question of the toxicity of the olives, a salt solution suspension was made of the pulp, and this was injected intraperitoneally into guinea pigs and white mice. One c. c. was injected into the white mice and two c. c. were into the guinea pigs. (In the white mice the dose injected was about one-twentieth of the body weight of the animal).

These animals were kept under observation for a number of days. In another set of animals, feeding experiments were conducted upon white mice. The salt suspension of the olives was placed upon bread and this was all the animal was given for twenty-four hours. It is claimed that the most pronounced symptom of botulism in the lower animals is paralysis of the hind extremities. No animal under observation presented these symptoms.

Three mice (3883, 3865, 1263) died of peritonitis following inoculation (6 hrs., 12 hrs., 24 hrs.), one mouse (6675) was killed in a result of a fight; two others died (3865, 1264) from inoculation, but no lesions were observed at autopsy, and the heart blood was free from bacteria. One mouse died within twenty-four hours after being fed on soaked bread. No lesions were demonstrable at autopsy, and the blood was sterile. One guinea pig (3862) died after four days, but autopsy showed few adhesions in peritoneal cavity, and the blood was sterile.

As none of the animals presented the typical lesions of botulism, it was thought by allowing the suspension to stand for a day or two in the ice-box, that more toxin (if present) would be brought into solution. But even after standing this length of time, and inoculating and feeding mice and guinea pigs no ill results were noticed. In examining the sediment of the salt suspension, organisms of some sort were observed in all specimens. A number contained hyphae and spores of mold fungi; quite a few contained yeasts and molds, while the greatest number showed Gram negative bacilli and others Gram positive bacilli. Some contained Gram positive micrococci, arranged in short chains, and in a few the chains of micrococci were Gram negative. In two specimens a bacillus was encountered which possessed the characteristics of the B. tetani, i. e., about the same size and with a terminal round spore. It was generally Gram negative, however. Long filaments, resembling leptothrices; bacilli, corresponding in morphology to lactic acid bacilli, were also encountered. In some specimens, even though the consistency of the fruit was pasty, very few organisms were found, and in others, every field of the microscope was fairly well filled with microorganisms.

Besides the usual inoculations of the salt solution suspensions into alkaline gelatin and alkaline litmus lactose agar, inoculations were made into sterile bouillon, using ten cc. of the liquor from the cans or jars. In almost every instance a firm pellicle developed within twenty-four to thirty-six hours, at body temperature (37 C) in an aerobic atmosphere.

TECHNIC.

The technic employed in the bacteriological examinations of these olives were as follows:

After numbering the specimens, the top of the can or jar was cleaned with a rag, and then exposed to the flame of a bunsen burner, or placed in boiling water, to remove any bacteria from the surface of the can. The can or jar was next opened with a can opener, which was always kept in a bath of boiling water. Upon opening the can, the first layer or two of the olives were removed with a sterile forceps, and from the depth of the can at least four large, or six small, olives were placed in a sterile mortar, and were then cut with a sterile scissors or crushed with a sterile pestle. After crushing the pulp, about 30 c. c. of sterile salt solution was added and the pulp thoroughly mixed in this solution. Then with a long sterile needle (made expressly for anaerobic cultures) at least one to two c. c. of suspension were drawn into a sterile ten c. c. syringe, and injected into deep tubes of culture media, the surface of the medium covered with oil and the tubes kept at ordinary room temperature. The culture media used were alkaline litmus glucose agar, alkaline gelatin and a medium made with pumpkin as a basis, and solidified with agar.

COMMENT.

From the bacteriological examination and the results of animal inoculation, it can be said that the olives submitted for examination presented nothing that was poisonous, or absolutely unfit for food purposes.

From the number of bacteria present in the specimens, more especially in some, either gross carelessness has been exercised in a sanitary sense in preparing the olives, or, as in the case of molds and yeasts and (even some bacteria) these represent the organisms most commonly found in overripe or decaying fruit. There was never observed in cultures any organism resembling the bacillus botulinus.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. OFFICE OF INFORMATION.

BOTULINUS POISON NEVER PRESENT IN SOUND FOOD.

FOOD OFFICIALS WARN CONSUMERS TO WATCH FOR SIGNS OF SPOILAGE IN FOOD.

Botulinus poisoning which recently killed six in one family in New York is caused by eating spoiled food infected with the bacillus botulinus, say the officials of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, who have investigated this and other poisoning cases in connection with the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act. In the New York case death was caused by botulinus poison in ripe olives. The olives remaining in the bottle in this case had an offensive odor. The same condition was found in the food in other cases investigated by the department. All spoiled food does not contain this poison, but any spoiled food even though the spoilage be slight may contain it, and for this reason, say the officials, all food showing even the slightest unnatural odor, unnatural color, swelling of the container, signs of gas, or any evidence of decomposition whatever, should be discarded.

The Department of Agriculture has used every possible effort and gone to the limit of its legal authority to remove all dangerous foods from the market by seizure under the Food and Drugs Act, say the officials. Each time when botulinus poisoning has occurred food inspectors have traced through the channels of commerce the batch from which the poisonous food came and have used all measures under the law to remove it from the market. Samples from all other brands put out by the packer have been examined. Since the law authorizes seizure in such cases only when the foods are actually found to be decomposed or to contain poisonous ingredients, since only an occasional package in millions is infected with bacillus botulinus, and since it is physically possible to open and examine but a comparatively few of the millions of cans entering interstate commerce, it is beyond the power of the authorities to protect the public completely. For this reason they emphasize the necessity for scrupulous care on the part of persons opening and serving foods to discard anything which is spoiled. In products not obviously spoiled, if there is doubt in the recognition of the odor proper to the product, thorough cooking will remove the possibility of danger from botulism. If spoilage is apparent, destruction is recommended by the specialists.

Nobody knows just how the bacillus botulinus gets into any particular food. It has been found in articles put up in the home by the careful housewife and in goods packed in commercial establishments. It may be present in a few packages only of any lot. There is no method, the officials say, by which the packers or home canners can assure themselves by casual examination before canning that the product does not contain the bacillus botulinus.

If the food were in all cases properly sterilized and perfectly sealed the development of the poison would be impossible, but no method of preserving food has yet been found, the specialists say, that eliminates the occasional spoiled package. Failure to sterilize may not become apparent for weeks or even months after the canning of the article. If signs of spoilage have appeared when the can is opened, it is clear warning that the product is no longer edible. There is no greater probability of botulinus poisoning in olives than in many other products either commercial or domestic. Until this year it has been more commonly found in string beans, asparagus and the like. It was originally found in sausage. It has been found in cheese, it is present sometimes in stock food, such as moldy hay and other kinds of spoiled forage, but it has never been found in the department investigations in any kind of food that was not spoiled.

THINGS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW.

Spoiled Fruits Cause Botulism.

From The World Magazine.

The deaths of several persons in the Bronx, New York, after eating olives, brings up once again the great danger of the disease now called "botulism," which results from eating spoiled vegetables.

In October last there was an outbreak of "botulism" at Grosse Pointe, a suburb of Detroit, after a dinner party at which olives were served. Drs. Charles G. Jennings, Ernest W. Haass and Alphaeus F. Jennings attended the patients, and now they report to the Journal of the American Medical Association on their observations.

"The source of the toxin," they write, "was a glass jar of ripe olives. This food was later analyzed by Dr. Herbert W. Emerson of the Hygienic Laboratory of the University of Michigan, Dr. Plinn F. Morse of Harper Hospital and the Detroit Board of Health. Bacillus botulinus was found by each of these investigators, and the fluid from the olives was demonstrated to be lethal for guinea pigs in doses of 0.01 c. c.

"The olives were first served at a formal dinner, October 18, 1919, at the residence of Mr. M. W. S., and there were present the host, hostess and six guests. One of the guests noticed that the olives were soft and remarked that they had a peculiar odor. They were, however, eaten by four of the diners and one waitress, and of this group two died, two were made moderately sick but recovered, while one escaped entirely. On the following days, October 19-21, the olives were eaten by Master L. S. and Miss F. S., children of the host, and by Miss J. M., a waitress in the home. All of this group died. There were in all eight persons who are known to have eaten the olives. Of these one escaped entirely, two were slightly affected, and five died."

The symptoms of poisoning did not come at once; the earliest was about twelve hours after eating, while in four of the cases nothing was noticed for seventy hours. The onset was gradual, beginning generally with difficulty of vision, and the symptoms-vomiting, pain in the abdomen, paralysis of the face and neck, difficulty in swallowing, cessation of abdominal breathing, great prostration became progressively worse until death ensued, in twelve hours in two cases, thirty-six hours in one and seventy-two hours in two. Not all the symptoms appeared in all the cases, but paralysis of the face and neck were constant.

Prof. Robert Graham of the University of Illinois furnished his anti-botulinus serum. It was administered in two of the cases; in one of these the patient recovered from a very mild attack, in the other she died.

"To be of value," write the physicians, "the serum must be administered early. This can be accomplished only by an early recognition of the disease and by having depots of serum in various centers about the country. If a case of botulism occurs, careful search for the poisoned food should be made and all persons who have eaten it should be given good sized prophylactic doses of the serum."

As treatment, they recommend washing out the stomach, free catharsis by castor oil and enemas, with supportive measures.

There have been forty recognized outbreaks of botulism in the United States, with 150 cases and 97 deaths.

The disease is caused by a germ of decay in spoiled vegetables and fruits. This germ is amazingly resistant to measures that kill most germs; boiling does not destroy it, unless continued for several hours, nor does steam under fifteen pounds pressure for ten minutes. Therefore it is important that all vegetables and fruits used for canning or preserving be in perfectly sound condition. This is the only way to insure safety, although fractional sterilization of one hour for three successive days, provided the cans or jars be kept tightly sealed in the intervals, is successful in sterilizing the food, as is the method of adding over 2 per cent. of lemon juice to the food and exposing the cans to boiling water for one hour.

The poison is destroyed by light and air but maintains its virulence for more than six months if it is sealed and kept in a dark place.

ESSENTIAL FACTORS IN PASTEURIZATION.

Milk control officials should concern themselves with the efficiency of the various pasteurizing processes carried on in their communities and with the relative safeness of the pasteurized product.

The equipment necessary for proper pasteurization of milk should provide for:

1. Heating and holding the entire quantity of milk at the proper temperature (145 degrees F.) for the specified time (30 minutes).
2. Cooling the pasteurized milk to below 50 degrees F. immediately after the heating and holding process.

In order to facilitate proper pasteurization some form of recording thermometer to record the temperature of the milk during the process is usually installed. To check the accuracy of this thermometer frequent comparison should be made with an accurate standard thermometer. The point of attachment of the bulb of the thermometer varies with different apparatus and records secured should not be accepted as conclusive evidence that the entire quantity of milk has received the maximum degree of heat recorded. When the temperature record extends over a period of time, as in the case of vat holders, the charts usually record from the time the milk enters the vat until the milk leaves it. In interpreting the record the time when the vat became filled should be known, and the time of holding the milk at the proper temperature gauged from that point to the time the vat begins to empty. Since all the milk should be held 30 minutes, this will result in some milk being held longer than the required time, as the temperature remains high while the vat is being emptied; but it is the only positive method of assuring that all the milk receives the minimum required treatment.

For ascertaining the actual holding time of the entire quantity of milk in any heating and holding apparatus, there seems to be no better way than by personal observation with an accurate timepiece.

When the temperature of heating is controlled by hand steam valves, the constant presence of the operator is necessary in order to avoid fluctuations in heating. However, with this kind of control slight variations of the temperature record chart may be expected. When automatic temperature controls are used the record on the chart will be more uniform.

Sometimes milk plants are required to furnish the health department with the record charts showing each day's milk heating record. When it is difficult for milk control officials to make daily observations, especially in large cities having several pasteurizing plants, these charts may be kept on file at the plants. In order to avoid substitution or duplication, some health departments stamp and date charts ahead and furnish them to the milk plants.

LABORATORY CONTROL OF PASTEURIZATION.

Health officials should have an intimate knowledge of the workings of a milk pasteurizing plant, and should not rest assured of a safe product because of the mere presence of such a plant in the city.

Special attention should be given to the operation of a milk pasteurizing plant because of its being a possible centralized source for the dissemination of a communicable disease.

Bacteriological control of the process of pasteurization and of the condition of the subsequent containers and contact surfaces is essential. This control should be conducted frequently by a trained bacteriologist, and the health officer should keep a constant check upon the work being done.

In considering the efficiency of various pasteurizing processes, it should be understood that the per cent. reduction of bacteria in raw milk by heating, does not form a conclusive measure of safeness in the final product. Any inoculation subsequent to the heating process introduces an uncertain element which may be of serious concern and which may void the reduction in bacteria already secured.

The purpose of bacterial control should be to ascertain the degree of reduction of bacteria due to heating and also the increase in bacteria because of unsterile contact surfaces, carelessness, or delay afterwards.

In the examination of milk to determine the per cent reduction due to the heating process, a series of at least five samples should be secured aseptically at intervals, at each point representing a definite stage in the pasteurizing process. It is only in this manner that undue changes in the bacterial content can be noted, and corrections made.

It is important that the proper time and temperature of heating be known as results will vary as these factors vary. An accurately tested thermometer should be used and compared with that used by the milk plant. The time of heating and holding should be checked by comparing it with an accurate time piece.

The following series of samples should be taken and examinations made as indicated:

1. Raw milk at entrance to heater, for bacteria and temperature.
2. Heated milk after being held, for bacteria, time of holding, and temperature.
3. Milk as it comes from the cooler, for bacteria and temperature.
4. Milk in bottles or cans, for bacteria, temperature and length of time before placing in cold storage.
5. Milk in bottles or cans after storage, for bacteria, temperature of milk and room and time of storage period.
6. Bottles or other final containers before the addition of milk, for bacteria in order to determine efficiency of washing and sterilization.

All samples should be iced immediately and removed to the laboratory for dilution and plating. When results are known the reduction in bacteria, and the gain in bacteria at the different points can be computed, using the average bacteria count of the raw milk samples as a basis.

MEANING OF THE TERM "PASTEURIZATION."

The term "pasteurization," as applied to milk, should mean a process of heating to 145° F. and holding at that temperature for 30 minutes, but as applied under commercial conditions it is the process of heating for a short or long period, as the different methods demand, at temperatures usually between 140° and 185° F. The process is followed by rapid cooling. The term originated from the experiments of Louis Pasteur in France. From 1860 to 1864, in experimenting on the "diseases" of wine, he found that heating for a few moments at temperatures of from 122° to 140° F. was sufficient to prevent abnormal fermentations and souring in the wine. A little later he found that by a similar heating beer could be preserved from souring. The application of the process gave rise to the term "pasteurization."

CONCERNING UNIFORMITY OF FOOD LAWS.

Much might be said in favor of uniformity of state and federal regulations concerning the manufacture and sale of foodstuffs and non-intoxicating beverages. Such uniformity would certainly make matters much easier for manufacturers. Under existing conditions manufacturers of foods and drinks are much in the situation of the country's railroads before the government took them over—subject to federal control and also to the control of forty-eight states. Exclusive government oversight or uniformity of control would surely work to the advantage of the manufacturer and perhaps to some extent to that of the vendor. If all other conditions were equal federal oversight alone or the adoption of a uniform standard for the nation and the states, would tend toward economy and simplicity.

Unfortunately, conditions are far from equal. Some states have better laws than the federal government; others have inferior laws. In some states enforcement of the laws is lax, in others it is efficient; there is reason to suspect that there is a certain degree of laxness in the enforcement of the national food and drugs act. We are convinced that Pennsylvania's dairy and food laws, as well as the acts relating to the manufacture and sale of non-alcoholic drinks, are in every vital sense much superior to the national act. We believe our laws are enforced much more strictly than the federal law. Much as Pennsylvania might desire uniformity, she would certainly oppose anything of the sort that did not measure up to her code. We are not willing to take any backward step.

Our theory is that the people are entitled to pure food and drink. We believe that every purchaser is entitled to the article he asks for and pays for. It is upon that principle that successive legislatures have built up in Pennsylvania a series of acts concerning food and drink under the provisions of which the inhabitants of the commonwealth have been protected from fraud or imposition. All our laws have the protection of the public health as their fundamental purpose. As a result of these acts and of their vigorous enforcement the eight million inhabitants of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania are getting purer food and better food than their brethren of some other states. Naturally enough, they would feel very uncomfortable over any process of legislation, any mingling of federal and state legislation concerning foods and beverages, that would tend to lower the standard in Pennsylvania. On the contrary, the nation and the states should come up to Pennsylvania's standard.

FEDERAL CHEMISTS WATCHING RAINBOW SUGAR.

That all samples of so-called "rainbow" sugar so far examined by the Bureau of Chemistry have been found to be colored by harmless dyes is the statement of the United States Department of Agriculture, whose pure food experts began testing samples of this product soon after it appeared on the market. Repeated inquiries coming to the bureau from many parts of the country seem to indicate that considerable quantities of this sugar have been supplied to grocers.

The department states that in accord with the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act it will continue to examine samples of this tinted product to ascertain whether or not harmful dyes are used in the future. Only colors known to be harmless have been used in the samples tested and under the Food and Drugs Act their use can be continued so long as they do not conceal inferiority. The sugar so far examined is harmless, sound, and not inferior, so that the practice of the refiners does not conflict with the provisions of this law.

The method employed in tinting the sugar examined is relatively simple and adds very little to the cost of the product and nothing to its food value. Refiners state that the shortage of sugar has created an opportunity to place on the market considerable reserve stores of this colored product which ordinarily is used only for confections. They deny that they have colored their stocks of white sugar in order that a higher price might be demanded for it.

VINEGAR DECISION REAFFIRMED.

The term "cider vinegar" should be applied only to the product made from fermented apple juice and it is not permissible to use this name for the product made from chops and dried skins and cores by the process of soaking and subsequent fermentation, according to a recent ruling of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, which reaffirmed the position taken previously by the Department in Food Inspection Decision 140 relating to the labeling of vinegars.

This decision was made in reply to certain manufacturers who requested permission to label their product, made from dried or evaporated apple products, as cider vinegar, claiming that their product was equal to or superior to the article made from fresh apple cider. The Bureau of Chemistry does not question the wholesomeness of such a product, if made from clean, sound material, but holds that the purchaser should be informed as to the nature of the material from which it is made.

The Bureau, in a letter reaffirming the position taken previously by the Department stated that "it would be remiss in its duty in connection with the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act if it should recede from the position stated in Food Inspection Decision 140. Briefly stated, the object of the act is to protect the purchaser of any article within the scope of the act by making it as certain as possible that he receives the article for which he pays. If the purchaser makes no distinction between a cider or apple vinegar as defined in Food Inspection Decision 140 and one made from evaporated apple products, there would appear to be no reason why the manufacturer should hesitate to plainly label or brand his product in such a way as to show the nature of the material from which it is produced. If the purchaser does make a distinction, whether from prejudice or other reasons, he has every right to receive an article of the kind and quality desired and paid for. I regret that our views on the subject are so much at variance, but under the circumstances the duty of the Bureau appears to be clear, and if necessary the matter will have to go to the courts for a decision."

Food Inspection Decision 140 defines vinegar, cider vinegar, apple vinegar, as "the product made from the alcoholic and subsequent acetous fermentations of the expressed juice of apples," and states that the product "made from dried apple skins, cores, and chops, by the process of soaking, with subsequent alcoholic and acetous fermentations of the solutions thus obtained, is not entitled to be called vinegar without further designation, but must be plainly marked to show the material from which it is produced. The dried stock from which this product is prepared must be clean and made from sound material."

METHODS FOR DETECTING DECOMPOSITION IN CATSUP.

Microscopic Count Method Used by Government Specialists in Testing Tomato Products.

Washington, D. C.—Decomposition in the materials used in the manufacture of catsup and other tomato products can be detected most readily and certainly in all cases by the Howard Microscopic Count Method, according to the specialists of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, who examine samples from interstate shipments in the enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act. Chemical tests, while sometimes satisfactory for detecting spoilage caused by bacteria in tomato products, are not always effective in detecting spoilage resulting from mold.

The Howard Microscopic Count Method has been used by the Government specialists for over ten years and is used by many commercial chemists in testing tomato products and by practical catsup manufacturers in controlling the purity of their product. It has been the basis of action under the Federal Food and Drugs Act in hundreds of cases. The Government specialists state that a high mold count in tomato products invariably indicates a product made from decomposed or partly decomposed tomatoes. In all the examinations made by them high mold counts were never found in tomato products except where decayed materials had been used. The use of moldy tomatoes in the manufacture of catsup and similar products has been revealed by the mold count obtained by the Howard Method when no conclusive evidence could be detected by the usual methods of chemical analysis.

Several years ago considerable work was done by the specialists in the Bureau of Chemistry to develop effective chemical tests for determining spoilage in tomato products, and it was for some time supposed that the spoilage in tomato products could be detected by methods of chemical analysis. Later investigational work has shown, however, that spoilage caused by mold ordinarily can not be established conclusively by chemical analysis alone, but that such spoilage can be proved definitely by the Howard Microscopic Count Method. For this reason, say the specialists, the Microscopic Count Method is now the principal means used by them to detect spoilage in tomato products.

At a recent trial in the Federal Court in Chicago, based upon the seizure by the Government of several hundred cases of tomato catsup on the charge that it was made from partly decomposed tomatoes, as shown by the high mold count obtained by the Howard Microscopic Count, testimony was introduced by the Government to the effect that the mold count indicated the use of not less than 20 per cent. of rotten tomatoes in the manufacture of the catsup. Testimony regarding the reliability of this method was given by the Government specialists, by commercial chemists and by a practical catsup manufacturer. The claimant of the seized catsup introduced the testimony of a commercial chemist who attacked the reliability of the Howard Microscopic Count Method, testifying that he obtained a lower mold count by a different method and that he was unable by chemical analysis to detect any spoilage in the catsup under seizure. The Government introduced chemists to testify that the ordinary chemical methods are not conclusive in the detection of spoilage due to mold. The Government specialists testified that molds do destroy the citric acid of the tomato, however, and that the figures submitted by the claimant chemist showed that the citric acid in the seized catsup had been partly destroyed by the mold.

The claimant testified that extreme care was used in the elimination of rotten tomatoes. Employees of the factory where the seized catsup was made testified on the contrary that partly rotten tomatoes had been used by the claimant in the manufacture of catsup. According to their testimony, thorough sorting was impossible on account of the bad condition of the tomatoes, the rate at which they were dumped upon the sorting belt, and the excessively rapid rate of movement of the belt.

A practical catsup manufacturer who makes catsup on a large scale testified that he used the Howard Microscopic Count Method in controlling the purity of the output of his factory. He testified that whenever he found the counts running above normal in the operation of his factory an investigation always revealed that some decomposed material was getting into his product, either because the sorters were becoming careless in their work or because the tomatoes were dumped upon the sorting apron so rapidly as to make impossible efficient sorting. He further testified that when he found such a condition by feeding the tomatoes slower, or by putting on more sorters, the quality of the stock going into the cyclones was improved, and that such improvement was always reflected by a decrease in the microscopic count in the finished product. A commercial chemist testified that he used the Howard Microscopic Count Method daily in examining tomato products of commercial factories. It had been his experience that high mold counts obtained by this method always showed that partly decayed tomatoes had been used.

The Chicago case was tried before a jury. The verdict was favorable to the Government, the catsup being held to be adulterated as alleged in the libel.

Shipments of tomato products coming within the jurisdiction of the Federal Food and Drugs Act will be watched closely by food inspectors, say the officials. The Microscopic Count Method will be used in examining samples from such shipments and appropriate action under the Food and Drugs Act will be taken in all cases found to be in violation of the provisions of that act.

Bulletin 581, United States Department of Agriculture, entitled, "Microscopical Studies on Tomato Products," explains fully the Howard Microscopic Count Method as used by the Government specialists. Copies of this bulletin may be obtained upon application to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Pennsylvania food laws were constructed upon the theory that the people are entitled to honest food, which means pure food.

It will be a fine day for the people of the nation when all our food laws are based upon the formula adopted by Pennsylvania.

The manufacturers and vendors of counterfeit food products are almost as great criminals as the persons who sell wood alcohol for beverage purposes.

There wouldn't be a single prosecution under the food laws of this commonwealth if they were not violated by greed and indifference.

The high cost of living is an increasingly serious problem to the average householder. The man who discovers the remedy will be immortalized.

Of course there are wonderful possibilities about a fish diet for all those who are fond of that sort of food.

Both manufacturers and vendors of food products should familiarize themselves with the tenor of the food laws of the state.

Not even the federal government has the right to invade Pennsylvania and set aside her food laws. And there are moments when this is a particularly fine thing.

The doctors and other experts tell us seriously and frequently that moderation in eating is one of the secrets of long life. Yet they set us a very poor example more frequently than not.

In the midst of our abundance we should find time to turn a practically sympathetic heart and hand toward the starving children and adults of the war-worn lands. As our gifts aid them in a moment of dire need, their gratitude will enrich our future lives.

Farm animals are generally well-treated these days, much better, in fact, than their brothers and sisters of the city streets. Good treatment of animals is one of life's cardinal virtues.

The birds of the field and the forest are the farmer's most excellent and very useful friends. As such they are entitled to thoughtful care and generous helpings to the crumbs that fall from the householder's table.

Moderation in the use of food is one of the expedients the wise householder adopts to reduce the cost of daily living in these strenuous times.

Of course the babies of Pennsylvania, as well as the state's invalids are entitled to the best quality of milk.

A wonderful improvement has occurred in the quality of the food products manufactured and sold in this state, as compared with the condition of affairs before the lawmakers began to arouse themselves to the vital importance of providing by law for the protection of the consuming public.
